British Labor Party's Race Is Narrowed to Three Men

By ROBERT B. SEMPLE Jr.
Special to The New York Times

LONDON, March 25—The six-month contest to succeed Harold Wilson as Britain's Prime Minister turned unexpectedly tonight into a struggle involving only three — Michael Foot, James Callaghan and Denis Healey.

The first round of balloting among Labor members of the House of Commons produced no candidate with the required majority, and a second round was scheduled for Tuesday. Mr. Foot, the Em-ment Secretary and champion of the party's left wing, led with 90 votes, followed by Mr. Callaghan, the Foreign Secretary and odds-on favorite, with 84.

The two were followed by Roy Jenkins, the Home Secretary, with 58; Anthony Wedgwood Benn, the Energy Secretary, with 37; Mr. Healey, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, with 30, and Anthony Crosland, Environmental Secretary, with 17.

Mr. Crosland was promptly eliminated under party rules because he finished at the bottom. Shortly after the results were announced, Mr. Benn, another favorite of the left, declared that he saw no point in going further and announced his support for Mr. Foot.

Then came the surprise of the evening. Evidently disappointed by his total—and persuaded he had already reached his maximum strength — Mr. Jenkins, leader of the right wing of the party, withdrew without announcing his preference.

Although it is always risky to apply firm ideological labels to British politicians, this effectively gives Labor members the following broad choice:

Mr. Foot, an intellectual Socialist, a fervent ally of trade union leaders, a government interventionist and ardent op-

Angola Withdrawal Set by South Africa

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE TOWN, March 25—South Africa announced today that it would withdraw all its forces from southern Angola by Saturday.

Defense Minister Pieter W. Botha said the withdrawal of 3,000 to 5,000 troops guarding the multimillion-dollar Cunene River hydroelectric and irrigation project was taking place after Angolan guarantees to protect South Africa's border interests.

His statement confirmed a Government announcement over the weekend that South African troops would get out of Angola once the Govern-

Controversial Word Changed

The use of the word "deplorable," rather than "condemns," as originally suggested by the sponsors, was described as a big concession to American feelings.

The United States vetoed four earlier resolutions affecting Israel that were brought before the Security Council in 1972, 1973, 1975 and in January. Many other Council resolutions on the Middle East over the years passed with American delegates backing them, or abstaining from voting.

The Council session that began Monday was characterized, for the first time, by simultaneous attendance of representatives of both Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization. Israel had boycotted

U.S. VETO BLOCKS A U.N. RESOLUTION CRITICIZING ISRAEL

Document Assailing Policies in Jerusalem and West Bank Called Unbalanced

By PAUL HOFMANN
Special to The New York Times

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., March 25—The United States tonight vetoed in the Security Council a resolution deploring Israeli policies in Jerusalem and the occupied areas on the West Bank of the Jordan River.

William W. Scranton, the new United States representative at the United Nations, said that the resolution was unbalanced.

The 14-to-1 vote concluded a debate that began Monday on anti-Israeli unrest in Jerusalem and in West Bank towns.

The alternative to a veto would have been abstention, permitting the Security Council to adopt the text.

5 Nations Sponsored It

Voting for the resolution were Benin (formerly Dahomey), Britain, China, France, Guyana, Italy, Japan, Libya, Pakistan, Panama, Rumania, the Soviet Union, Sweden and Tanzania.

The draft resolution had been worked out by a group of third-world members of the Council in consultation with Arab and other Islamic countries and with Communist powers. Benin, Guyana, Panama, Pakistan and Tanzania were the sponsors of the text.

The resolution deplored "Israel's failure to put a stop to actions and policies tending to change the status of the city of Jerusalem" and called on Israel to refrain from taking steps against Arab inhabitants of occupied areas, to respect the "inviolability of the holy places," and desist from alleged expropriation of Arab land or the establishment of Israeli settlements on it.

Reilly Wins Retrial in Mother's Slaying

By MICHAEL KNIGHT
Special to The New York Times

LITCHFIELD, Conn., March 25—Peter A. Reilly was granted a new trial here today by a Superior Court judge who ruled that his conviction on charges of killing his mother two and a half years ago represented "a grave injustice."

"Our statute, which provides the remedy of a new trial, is designed to correct serious miscarriages of justice," Judge John A. Speziale ruled in a 34-page decision handed down here this morning. "This court concludes that the purpose of this statute would be thwarted if the conviction of Peter A. Reilly were allowed to stand."

Peter A. Reilly reading the judge's decision yesterday

The judge, who presided at the lanky, 21-year-old youth's trial in 1974 and later sentenced him to serve from 6 to 16 years in prison for the murder in nearby Canaan, predicted after reviewing what he called "the unusual, bizarre and complicated nature of the facts and circumstances of this case" that Mr. Reilly would never be convicted of the murder again.

"It is readily apparent that a grave injustice has been done and that upon a new trial it is more than likely that a different result will be reached," he wrote in ruling on the young man's petition for a new trial.

The decision today was also a victory for the scores of his friends and supporters who had raised money for his defense and have long believed in his innocence.

Mr. Reilly had contended that he came home the night of Sept. 28, 1973, shortly before 10 and discovered his mother, Barbara Gibbons, lying apparently dead on the floor of their cottage.

The case attracted nationwide attention after The New York Times in December 1975 published its own investigation of the murder and conviction.

The Times decided to investigate the case after Arthur Miller, the playwright and one of Mr. Reilly's supporters, visited the newspaper and asserted that as a result of his own detective work he was convinced that Mr. Reilly had been un-

Franjeh Abandons Palace In Lebanon After Shelling

By HENRY TANNER
Special to The New York Times

BEIRUT, Lebanon, March 25 (of Lieut. Ahmed al-Khatib, the President Suleiman Franjeh was forced to abandon the Presidential Palace overlooking Beirut today after it was hit by heavy artillery. He took refuge in a Christian stronghold 13 miles north of the capital.

His forced withdrawal in the face of a general offensive by Muslim military forces was a harsh blow to the morale of the President's Christian supporters and allies.

A few hours later Pierre Gemayel, another Christian leader, made an impassioned radio appeal to "all able-bodied Christian men and women save the nearest post if it is too near home."

Mr. Gemayel said.

Both sides in the nearly year-old civil war thus are on record now as seeking a military solution rather than a new cease-fire as proposed by Syria.

Yesterday, Kamal Jumblat, the dominant political figure in the leftist-Muslim alliance, declared: "We are not considering a cease-fire. Let Suleiman Franjeh resign immediately and unconditionally."

Mr. Jumblat, who is the leader of the Muslim Druse sect, has refused to cooperate with the Syrian mediators.

By DOUGLAS E. KNEELAND

In the last few days of his campaign for the Democratic Presidential nomination, Senator Henry M. Jackson has edged toward the left of the political spectrum for this state's April 6 primary election, he has repeatedly placed his heaviest emphasis on programs to provide jobs for the unemployed, save the cities from financial disaster and aid the poor, the elderly and the ill.

In Albany, meanwhile, the State Supreme Court ruled in Senator Jackson's favor, permitting 33 of his convention-delegate candidates to be identified on the primary ballot as his supporters. Such identification had been challenged on the ground that the potential delegates had missed the filing deadline for identifying themselves with a candidate.

The Senator's shift to the left seemed apparent Wednesday night at a dinner sponsored by the Social Democrats, U.S.A., a descendant of the Socialist Party of Eugene V. Debs and Norman Thomas. Mr. Jackson asked the 500 diners gathered in the ballroom of the Roosevelt Hotel: "Isn't it interesting that I'm

Clues to Identity of Genetic 'Master Switch' Grow

By WALTER SULLIVAN

Researchers appear to be closing in on the identity of a substance that "throws the master switch" in embryonic development, initiating the events that lead to the formation of specialized organs and finally to a fully developed organism.

So far the work, notably at Cambridge, England, and the University of Indiana in Bloomington, has concentrated on amphibians such as frogs and axolotls (related to salamanders). Findings published this month indicate, however, that material in frogs' eggs provides strong stimulation to some cells of human origin.

Understanding what turns on and turns off the genetic control system within the nucleus of every cell is one of the chief challenges in biology. In cancer the control system seems to break down and cell proliferation runs amok.

Axolotls and other relatively primitive animals can reactivate dormant parts of the genetic system to grow a new leg when one is severed. Why higher animals, including man, are unable to do so is unknown.

The "master switch" substance—or substances—under study at Cambridge and Bloomington appears active only in early stages of development, when, as the egg cells begin rapid subdivision, specialized cells begin to appear. It is suspected that it may be a similar or related substance that awakens the dormant genetic information in the nucleus of a specialized body cell, enabling it to direct the creation of a new individual.

The existence of such a genetic reawakener in frogs' eggs was dramatically shown eight years ago when Dr. John B. Gurdon, then at Oxford University, produced successions of identical frogs in the process known as cloning.

From frogs he removed specialized cells, such as skin cells, in which, as the animal grew, all nuclear control systems had been switched off except those needed to control the cell's special function. These nuclei were inserted into frogs' eggs whose own nuclei had been destroyed by ultraviolet light (which breaks down nucleic acids.)

Some substance in the egg apparently entered the inserted nucleus and switched on the entire sequence of events needed to evolve a new frog. The egg thus developed into a frog

All South Africa Troops to Quit Southern Angola by Tomorrow

South Africa's withdrawal from Angola toward the end of the conflict there was a direct Cuban-South African clash. But the Cuban Popular Movement's distance, while negotiations began through Britain and the United Nations, was not an "aggressor" in southern Angola.

The dam at Caluque, about 15 miles inside Angola, and a plant at Ruacana straddling the Angola border with South-West Africa are designed to supply water and power to the Ovambo region of South-West Africa. When Angola's civil war erupted, South African troops went to the area to protect the project and the workers there. South Africa refused to withdraw the troops until it received guarantees from the ruling Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola on the safety of the project.

When Popular Movement troops led by Cuban soldiers moved through southern Angola toward the end of the conflict there were of a direct Cuban-South African clash. But the Cuban Popular Movement's distance, while negotiations began through Britain and the United Nations, was not an "aggressor" in southern Angola.

Mr. Botha told the 120-member Parliament in Cape Town that assurances from Angola's Popular Movement regime on the safety of the Ruacana-Ruacana River project had been obtained by the United Nations Secretary General, Kurt Waldheim. "Seen as a whole, the Government of the People's Republic of Angola has not damaged the hydropower project concerned or the workers and the respect the international community," Mr. Botha said.

Kissinger and 3 Senators Meet on Egypt Arms Issue

By BENARD GWERTZMAN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 25 — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and three Senators have become engaged in negotiations to see whether a formula can be found to avoid a clash between the Ford Administration and Congress over the lifting of the military embargo against Egypt.

The three Senators—Jacob K. Javits of New York and Clifford P. Case of New Jersey, both Republicans, and Hubert H. Humphrey, Democrat of Minnesota—met with Mr. Kissinger this morning as the Administration took formal action to sell six C-130 military transports to Egypt, the first such military sale to Egypt in 20 years.

An earlier compromise suggested by the three Senators, all supporters of Israel, but also sympathetic to the Administration's moves to improve relations with Egypt, had been spurned by President Ford and Mr. Kissinger.

Signed Pledge Sought

The new negotiations center on an effort to have Mr. Kissinger sign a letter pledging that the United States will not sell Egypt anything more than the C-130's this year.

When the negotiations began about 10 days ago, the Senators proposed that there be an exchange of letters with Mr. Kissinger. But after Mr. Kissinger declined to be as specific in his letter as the Senators wanted, the stress in the negotiations now is on obtaining an Administration statement pledging no further sales to Egypt beyond the C-130's.

Several Senate sources said today that Mr. Kissinger had insisted on vague assertions, such as that the Administration had "no plans at this time" to sell additional military equipment this year. The senators want the limits to be precise.

Mr. Kissinger is understood to believe that it would be regarded abroad as a setback to President Anwar el-Sadat's public limited itself to the $40 million C-130 deal for the rest of the year.

Israel Opposes C-130

It would be seen as a victory for the Israel lobby, he feels, even though Israel publicly opposes even the sale of the C-130's as setting a dangerous precedent.

This morning at the State Department, the Senators and Mr. Kissinger failed to agree on the content of the letter, according to Mr. Javits, "we're still talking with the Secretary."

Mr. Kissinger informed the Senators, according to participants in the meeting, that President Ford had made the necessary determination to allow Egypt to buy the C-130's under the Foreign Military Sales Act, in effect, purchasing the planes from the Pentagon. A letter of notification will be sent to Congress by tomorrow, he said, as called for by law.

The letter was sent late this afternoon, a Congressional source said. He said the total package in the letter was for $65 million. This included about $40 million for the C-130's, $15 million for spare parts and maintenance, and $10 million for spare parts and maintenance.

The Gun Dictates the Way of Life in Beirut

By JAMES M. MARKHAM
Special to The New York Times

BEIRUT, Lebanon, March 25 — Three armed teenagers burst into the American's apartment. Two brandished Soviet-designed AK-47 assault rifles. The other, apparently the leader, carried an American M-16.

"Sniper! Sniper!" they shouted in Arabic, and began to ransack the apartment. The youth with the M-16, a frenzied look in his eyes, began to search for a sniper under a pile of papers on a Formica table. The papers fluttered to the floor.

Another race through the bedrooms, hunting under beds and in closets.

The American, having explained in his impoverished Arabic that he was not a sniper but a journalist, sat back in a rocking chair in front of an electric typewriter to lend credibility to the assertion.

The youths continued their futile search. The leader, wearing an American-cut army uniform, confronted the American with the best question of the evening: "Are you a Japanese?"

The American replied in the negative and produced his passport, which the gunman examined upside down. The youths began to calm down.

They explained that a Japanese sniper has just fired at a fellow gunman as he was painting a bold new name, Lebanese Arab Army, on what was once an officers' beach club beside the Mediterranean. The gunman was wounded in the leg before he could finish his handiwork.

Since the American's apartment overlooked the officers' beach and since he might be Japanese, the intruders remarked, the ransacking of the apartment was justified of course.

The youths then introduced themselves in a more customary fashion. One was from the Lebanese Arab Army made up largely of Moslem deserters from the regular Lebanese Army. Another was from the left-Wing Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine and the third, a faint grin visible under the red kaffiyeh, draping his head, declined to disclose his affiliation.

The American offered them coffee. They declined and went off in search of the "Japanese sniper."

An hour later, a well-dressed, unarmed man from the Progressive Socialist Party came by to apologize for the incident. He lived less than 50 yards away and asked to be called if there was any further trouble.

Such incidents have become part of the way of life in the urban jungle of Beirut these days, a city ruled by the whims of the gun.

It is hard to convey the strange normality of living in a place where every 500 yards one can be stopped by someone in a patchwork uniform, or notebook on a rare occasion, by someone in a real uniform and be asked at gunpoint to proffer a passport, a press card or a flimsy piece of paper issued by one of a score of organizations with names, leaders, rubber stamps and, above all, guns.

The phrase "roadblock" carries an ominous tone. And plenty of ominous things do happen at roadblocks in Beirut and in the countryside. But as often as not young men with guns set them up when they have nothing better to do.

A British diplomat was stopped at a roadblock near the seaside Riviera Hotel a while back and grumbled audibly about the fact. A youth who had demanded the diplomat's identity papers retorted: "What fun is it to have a roadblock if you can't stop cars?"

Three journalists were stopped at the crossroads near the Beirut airport where guerrillas from the Syrian-run As Saiga organization had dug in to keep Moslem deserters from marching on the residence of President Suleiman Franjeh.

The three explained they were journalists, and a guerrilla then asked: "Civilian or military?"

One of the cardinal military principles of this unpleasant war is that one should remain as far as possible from one's enemies. In that way one runs the smallest risk of being killed. In any case, most of the people killed in the death toll in the last 11 months may be as high as 10,000—are civilians, not fighters.

For months, President Franjeh and his sometime ally, Interior Minister Camille Chamoun, sat in safety at the modern presidential complex nestled among low pines at Baabda, listening to the roar of the fighting below.

Then, as the tide of battle began to turn against their own private armies, artillery batteries loyal to them began bombarding Beirut indiscriminately.

Finally, breaking the rules of the game, other gunners in Beirut began to shell Baabda.

Mr. Chamoun energetically criticized this assault on what he called "the seat of legality."

There is, of course, no legality left in Lebanon. Legality was eroded first with machine guns, then with mortars and rockets and, now, with long-range artillery. There is only the gun.

"If I stepped out of the front of my door," said a Cabinet minister, "and a band of armed men attacked me, who can I call? No one."

Kamal Jumblat, an apostle of Gandhian nonviolence and chief of the Progressive Socialist Party, was reviewing the troops in the mountain town of Aley. He gave a new perfunctory slap of the hand as he shuffled by a wobbly line of Druse warriors equipped with an international medley of weapons worthy of a United Nations peace-keeping force.

A Druse stepped out of line and gave what seemed to be an unauthorized huzzah. Kamal Bey, as he is known, seemed not to notice.

Knowing that his Druse, an Islamic sect in the mountains, are feared in the Christian territory of Lebanon, Mr. Jumblat announced the other day that he had formed something called "the Army of Sakhrieddine"—named after a fierce medieval Druse prince. It seems to have been a clever piece of scare warfare.

Doris, a German woman, runs, or ran, a restaurant that is too close to the battle-battered Holiday Inn. The restaurant used to be a haven for German and Scandinavian bargirls, whom she mothered.

The other day her husband drank too much arak, ran out in the street and was shot in the foot by a sniper. Then one of Doris's German bargirls dropped in, left two dogs in the one safe, busy room of the war-front restaurant. The girl was found naked and murdered later that night.

Now Doris has a wounded husband and two dogs she does not want. She cries a lot, like many people in Lebanon these days.

Today, a statement read over the state radio, controlled by the President's supporters, said that the palace was shelled during the night from three directions and that Mr. Franjeh decided to leave after communications were disrupted.
Other reports from Baabda said that the living quarters of the Franjeh family took direct hits from Moslem artillery at 6:30 A.M. and that a water main in the building broke.
The President and his family drove from Baabda to Junieh through the Christian-controlled eastern district of Beirut and then north on the coastal highway.
They were followed by military trucks carrying state papers as well as personal belongings, according to sources buy supplies.

The riots have been the most sustained, violent and costly of all the disturbances on the West Bank since the Israelis captured the area in the 1967 war.
Faced with continued unrest, Israeli security forces have cracked down harder than ever. Soldiers equipped with riot batons and heavy plastic shields have been posted in every town with orders to use whatever force is necessary to break up the demonstrations.
These tactics have led to Arab accusations of widespread brutality. Arab leaders on the West Bank contend that the soldiers have used excessive, even sadistic, violence in putting down demonstrations conducted in large part by high school students.
At the same time, the police and soldiers clearly have been provoked. They are regularly stoned by demonstrators whenever they appear on the scene and many have been injured.
Hebron a Violent Area
Hebron, where Mr. Ramilli suffered his fatal injuries, has been one of the worst areas. The demonstrations there have been especially violent, as have the tactics used by the soldiers. In addition, there have been clashes between the Arabs of Hebron and ultraorthodox Jews living in Kiryat Arba, an Israeli settlement established on a nearby hill in 1969.
Last Wednesday, settlers from Kiryat Arba reportedly abducted three Arab men from the Hebron market during a riot and took them back to the settlement. The Arabs were allegedly beaten with chains and bludgeoned by dogs.

There was no official confirmation of this account, but doctors at a Hebron hospital reported the admission of three men with severe dog bites and injuries who said they had been attacked by men from Kiryat Arba.
Conflicting Accounts
In the case of Mr. Ramilli, there are conflicting accounts of the beating that led to his death.
According to the military spokesman, he suffered his injuries after he attacked a soldier who had arrested him during a demonstration.
The spokesman said that Mr. Ramilli had tried to grab the soldier's weapon and had been subdued by other soldiers.
Arab sources say, however, that Mr. Ramilli was picked up by several soldiers in a truck and taken to another spot where he was jumped upon and beaten. These sources contend that the victim had not participated in the demonstration and that the beating was sheer vengeance on the part of soldiers who had been stoned earlier in the day by demonstrators.
In any event, both sides agree that the man severely beat and admitted to the hospital in critical condition.

Stockholders, said that so far 21 corporations had agreed to print the boycott resolution in proxy materials prepared for their annual meeting.
Mr. Maslow stressed that a request that a company include a boycott resolution in its proxy material was "not an allegation that they're involved" in a boycott.
Compliance with the Arab boycott, the Balter suit said, would "introduce a new element of risk into the value of Kodak shares." The Balters argued that it would place earnings in Arab countries "at the hazard of continued satisfactory boycott compliance."
Kodak's sales in Arab countries stood at about $11.5 million last year, out of total sales of $4.5 billion, the suit said.
On Feb. 18, almost a month before the Securities and Exchange Commission told Kodak and the Balters that it would not take action against Kodak if the resolution was omitted from proxy papers, Kodak told the Balters that it intended to omit the resolution.
Kodak said in a statement that it did not participate nor would it participate in any boycott, unless required by the Government. It deplored the action of the Jewish Congress in choosing Kodak "as a vehicle for settlement of a matter which centers in the general interpretation of S.E.C. regulations."

Federal Judge John M. Cannella ordered Kodak to show cause here Monday morning why he should not issue a preliminary injunction preventing Kodak from issuing any proxy materials or holding its annual meeting as planned on April 27. Kodak said the proxies are already in the mail.
Burmese Students Complete Two-Day University Sit-in RANGOON, Burma, March 25 (Reuters) — Students ended a two-day occupation of Rangoon University's convocation hall at dawn today. After having chanted anti-Government slogans throughout the night, the official news agency of Burma said.
Two student leaders were arrested and others have gone into hiding, the Government announced.
Yesterday the Government ordered all universities closed after 2,000 students marched through Rangoon demanding the release of students who had been detained and the postponement of examinations.

On a Sunny Beirut Street, Death, Pathos and Anger

BEIRUT, Lebanon, March 25—Three persons standing in the warm sunshine on the sidewalk of Hamra Street—the Fifth Avenue of Beirut—were killed at noon today when shells landed next to Shaker's Pharmacy.
Since the start of the civil war nearly a year ago, Shaker's has been the only pharmacy in the city center whose delivery men, riding a powerful Japanese motorcycle, delivered medicine on request throughout the night, often risking death.
One of the three persons killed today was such a delivery man.

 Council debates on the Middle East last December and January to protest participation of the Palestinian guerrilla movement.
 Israel affirms that it still considers the P.L.O. a terrorist organization intent on its destruction, and denies that the decision to take part in this week's debates means a change in policy.

The P.L.O. appears nevertheless to have gained in international respectability as a result of this week's Council session.
 Despite bitter exchanges between the Israeli and P.L.O. representatives, diplomats said that some progress had been achieved by the mere fact of having them sitting at the same table.

The text was formally introduced by Iqbal Akhund of Pakistan. This week's debate was brought about by a request for an urgent Council meeting by the body's two Islamic members, Pakistan and Libya.

Last night, before he announced the American "no" vote, Mr. Scranton explained why he was vetoing the resolution, contending that it did not correspond to the situation in Israeli-occupied territory.

It was incorrect, Mr. Scranton said, to charge that Israel's policy was aimed at changing the religious character of Jerusalem when "quite to the contrary, we think Israel's administration of the holy places in Jerusalem has literally and actively minimized tensions."

He added that the United States was engaged in an effort to "regain momentum in the negotiating process to reach peace in the Middle East, and was convinced the draft resolution "would not help" in these efforts.

The United States veto was lauded by the Israeli delegate, Chaim Herzog, who said after the vote that it was an effort "to stem attempts to convert the United Nations into an instrument of intransigent des-potisms and to turn the discussion on the Middle East away from one-sided fiction back to reality."

The observer of the Palestine
 Liberation Organization, Zehdi Labib Terzi said the vote had been "a great victory for a great event." He thanked the 14 Council members who cast affirmative votes and said the outcome had shown the "isolation of the United States."

This afternoon, Scranton met with the chairman of the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations, Rabbi Alexander M. Schindler. After the veto tonight, Rabbi Schindler issued a statement welcoming it and praising Mr. Scranton.

Rabbi Schindler said he had found Mr. Scranton "to be both understanding of, and sensitive to, the concerns of the American people for the security and dignity of Israel as an essential element of the just and lasting peace in the Middle East."

TEXT OF RESOLUTION
 Following is the text of the resolution on Israeli-occupied territories:

THE SECURITY COUNCIL, HAVING CONSIDERED recent developments in the occupied Arab territories, DEEPLY CONCERNED at the serious situation which has arisen in these territories as a result of continued Israeli

DEEPLY CONCERNED FURTHER at the measures taken by the Israeli authorities leading to the present grave situation including measures aimed at changing the physical, cultural, demographic and religious character of the occupied territories and, in particular, the City of Jerusalem, the establishment of Israeli settlements in the occupied territories and other violations of the human rights of the inhabitants of those territories,

EMPHASIZING the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by war,

RECALLING AND REAFFIRM-ING the resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council calling upon Israel to rescind all measures already taken and to desist from taking any further action which would alter the status of the City of Jerusalem and the character of the occupied Arab territories

NOTING that, notwithstanding the aforementioned resolutions, Israel persists in its policy aiming at changing the physical, culture, demographic and religious character of the City of Jerusalem in particular,

REAFFIRMING the urgent need for establishing a just and lasting peace in the Middle East,

1. DEPLORES Israel's failure to put a stop to actions and policies tending to change the status of the City of Jerusalem and to rescind measures already taken to that effect;

2. CALLS on Israel pending the speedy termination of its occupation, to refrain from all measures against the Arab inhabitants of the occupied territories;

3. CALLS on Israel to respect and uphold the inviolability of the Holy Places which are under its occupation and to desist from the expropriation of or encroachment upon Arab lands and property or the establishment of Israeli settlements thereon in the occupied Arab territories and to desist from all other actions and policies designed to change legal status of the City of Jerusalem and to rescind measures already taken to that effect;

4. DECIDES to keep the situation under constant attention with a view of meeting again should circumstances so require.

last fall." On Feb. 28, President Ford denounced Prime Minister Castro as "an international outlaw" because of Cuba's involvement with a large military force in the Angola civil war on the side of the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola.

Since then the Administration has sharpened warnings against any future Cuban military ventures, particularly regarding southern Africa, and the President and Secretary of State Kissinger have spoken on the matter every week.

Fred Harris, a candidate for the Democratic Presidential nomination, sent a telegram to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee today declaring that "trusted sources have indicated to me that the Ford Administration is planning a blockade of Cuba, related to Cuba's possible further involvement in Africa."

While Administration officials acknowledge that "all options" are under discussion for dealing with Cuba, one high official with responsibility for hemisphere affairs said: "We are not inclined to talk blockade."

"To say that options have been discussed is not to say that any of us is proposing a blockade," he continued. "Believes the President to consult with Congress before taking steps that could lead to war.

While most of the Administration warnings have been nominally addressed to Cuba, the officials said the ultimate target was the Soviet Union, without whose logistical support Cuba could not conduct any large-scale military ventures.

One official remarked that the Administration was not alone in trying to persuade the Soviet Union that future military moves in Africa involving Cubans would be regarded as a Soviet responsibility damaging East-West relations.

He said that France and Britain had recently advised Moscow that they viewed the Soviet-Cuban actions in Africa as detrimental to East-West relations, including their own relations with the Soviet Union. In addition, the Administration officials said that they believed the warnings to Cuba were having a positive effect among some black African governments and a number of Latin American nations.

They said that the success of Cuban troops in Angola—where they fought from late October to February, until the opponents of the Popular Movement were defeated—had frightened many Latin American and black African governments. "What is most important for the United States is to have a good African policy, with strong support for the blacks in Rhodesia and South-West Africa," one official said. "We're making some headway with that, and it may obviate further Cuban intervention."

"We understand that neither Mozambique nor Zambia want Cubans involved in Rhodesia," the official concluded.

Gromyko Answer Charges
Special to The New York Times
LONDON, March 25 — The Soviet Foreign Minister, Andrei A. Gromyko, today ridiculed any suggestion that his country was involved in the struggle for power in Rhodesia. "Do not believe in fairy tales about the Soviet Union having anything to do with either Rhodesia or Namibia [South-West Africa] if you want to be objective," he said at a news conference here at the end of a three-day visit to Britain.

He said that his talks with Foreign Secretary James Callaghan had covered the situation in Angola and "the area around Angola." He said that he believed the issues there could be resolved constructively.

Mr. Gromyko said that he did not want to discuss Cuban troops are still in Angola, where they aided the forces of the Popular Movement for the liberation of Angola in their victory over two other nationalist factions. Asked about Secretary of State Kissinger's warning against further Cuban involvement in the area, Mr. Gromyko said that the Cuban leadership had already made "appropriate statements" about its position.

In the House of Commons today Prime Minister Harold Wilson assured questioners that Mr. Gromyko had been left in no doubt "that if the Cubans were to intervene in any other territory there would be a new and extremely serious situation."

Limiting Public Jobs to Citizens Is Unconstitutional, Court Rules

A three-judge Federal constitutional court in Brooklyn declared unconstitutional in a 2-to-1 decision yesterday a state law that gives preference for employment on public construction contracts to citizens who have been residents of the state for at least 12 months.

Work in public employment is a right, like welfare assistance, that is guaranteed to resident aliens as well as citizens, Judge Murray I. Gurfein of the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit held with the concurrence of Judge Edward R. Neaher of Federal District Court.

"The state has a duty to all its lawful residents, resident alien or citizen," Judges Gurfein and Neaher held.

"It must try to see to it that they do not starve, that they have equal access to state public employment, as well as membership in the bar, and that they have equal access to private employment."

The cases involved were brought against the New York City Board of Education by six painting contractors who had been threatened with cancellation of school-painting contracts totaling $901,700 because they had hired resident aliens as painters when citizens of 12 months or more residence were unemployed.

Judge Thomas C. Platt of the District Court, in a dissenting opinion, argued that, if the Supreme Court wished to abrogate the older doctrines that the majority held were now obsolete, it should have the privilege of doing so.

He said that if the state set up and financed new jobs to combat unemployment but "makes them available to all comers," the state's objective "will have been frustrated and defeated" because the cause, under the circumstances, would compound the state's problem, not mitigate it.

The contractors involved were CDR Enterprises Ltd., the Ulysses C. Painting and G. C. Corporation, the Laconia Painting Corporation, the Stratos Contracting Corporation. Contracts involving 27 schools and averaging $33,000 were affected.

Chileans Arrest A Radio Executive And Plan His Exile

SANTIAGO, Chile, March 25 (AP)—Chile's military Government said today that it had arrested the general manager of a radio station and would exile him to a remote community near the Peruvian border.

Belisario Velasco, manager of the Christian Democratic party's controversial Radio Balmaceda, was arrested last night after he filed a court appeal of the shutdown of the station earlier in the week.

Comdr. Enrique Montero, Under Secretary of the Interior, said Mr. Velasco would be sent to Futre, 1,240 miles to the north, under a state of siege in effect since the armed forces seized power in 1973.

The latest shutdown of Balmaceda, which has been closed before, was for six days.

The military Government says the station's news programs are biased and "liable to produce alterations of public order."

Magazine Issue Seized

The Government also seized all copies of Ercilla, the country's leading news magazine, before its scheduled distribution yesterday on the ground that the issue contained biased news.

The national press association called the move against Ercilla a "grave act" and asked to meet with Government officials. The president of the Radio Broadcasters Association of Chile said any radio station shutdown must be considered an act against freedom of speech.

Ercilla editors said they were puzzled by the seizure because they did not have anything even mildly controversial in this week's issue.

Christian Democratic officials assert that the party has been the object of continued attacks. Several party leaders said they had received anonymous death threats.

The junta has banned all political activity but the Christian Democrats have maintained their party structure, now the largest in Chile.

Hall's Nomination For Air Force Job Withdrawn by Ford

WASHINGTON, March 25 (UPI)—President Ford withdrew today the nomination of Albert C. Hall as Assistant Secretary of the Air Force after it was disclosed that Mr. Hall had been promised a job by a major defense contractor when his Government service ended.

A Pentagon spokesman said that Mr. Hall, who requested that President Ford withdraw the nomination, had not been involved in any conflict of interest violations.

Hall also resigned as Assistant Defense Secretary for Intelligence but he will be allowed to perform consultant work for the Air Force.

When Mr. Hall first came to the Pentagon in 1963, he had a commitment from the Martin Marietta Corporation, his former employer, offering him a $85,000-a-year job and $30,000 in severance payments. He went back to the company in 1965 and returned to the Pentagon in 1971 with another arrangement involving severance payments.

Federal bribery law prohibits any Government officer from involvement in decisions or negotiations with contractors when he knowingly "has an arrangement concerning prospective employment."

Mr. Hall has said the termination agreements had been worked out with Pentagon lawyers and that he had withdrawn from any decisions involving Martin Marietta.

ARMS SMUGGLING TO JAPAN HALTED

U.S. Helps to Break Up Ring That Supplied Gangsters With California Pistols

TOKYO, March 25—Japanese and American police have apparently broken up a trans-Pacific gun and jewelry smuggling operation that supplied Japanese gangsters with pistols that were purchased in California and shipped here in golf bags.

Authorities here said today that year-long joint investigations by the United States Treasury Department and Japan's national police had led to the arrests of four Japanese gangsters, while three Americans were said to be in custody in Hawaii.

Private ownership of handguns in Japan is prohibited and the law is vigorously enforced. Illegal possession calls for imprisonment of up to five years.

As a result, in a nation of 111,000,000 people, there were only 37 homicides by handguns in 1974 and 34 of those were said to have been committed by underworld members. Nationally, pistols figured in only two robberies during that same year.

Pistols are so scarce here for the gangsters, who use them largely in their interecine warfare, that they have taken to adapting toy pistols to fire live ammunition.

Members of the gangs were allegedly willing to pay the American smugglers almost $750 each, or many times the original purchase price, for the .25-caliber weapons.

Some of the estimated 400 pistols involved in the smuggling operation were believed to have been used on March 10 in a clash between two rival ultrarightist groups near the home of Yoshio Kodama. Mr. Kodama—also an ultrarightist—is the central figure in the Lockheed aircraft bribery scandal here and the man whose Tokyo home was the target of a kamikaze-like plane attack on Tuesday.

The smuggled weapons were said to have already been used in gang warfare throughout Japan. Such struggles claimed their latest victim early this morning in Kyoto when Kim Sung Kon, a 39-year-old former convict and gang member, died in a gun battle with a rival faction outside a hotel.

The smuggling investigation is said to have begun here more than a year ago when customs officials spotted some Americans, who were known smugglers, visiting Japanese underworld members.

The purpose was allegedly to arm and, through the sale of smuggled emeralds, to finance the gangs' operations. Japanese police believe about 20 Americans and Japanese were involved.

The weapons were said to have been purchased retail in California and Hawaii and sent to Japan in leather golf bags.

One weapons transaction was said to have occurred last Nov. 7 when 41-year-old American, Gordon Von Neuman of Honolulu, allegedly delivered 10 pistols to members of the Sumiyoshi Rengo gave in a room at Tokyo's fashionable Kato Plaza Hotel.

In return he allegedly received more than two million yen. The police said he converted the Japanese currency into dollars—about $7,000—at an office of Desk and Company, the international currency brokers.

That is the same company used by the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation to funnel funds to Japan to promote the sale of its aircraft, allegedly through bribes and through fees to its secret sales agent here, Mr. Kodama.

An Argentine Hopes for Peace

By JONATHAN KANDELL
Special to The New York Times

CORDOBA, Argentina, March 25—Elio Rojas arrived in Cordoba from a small provincial town five years ago when he was a very young man with ambitions to become a lawyer.

He still attends university classes two hours every morning. But his main concern is maintaining a precarious middle-class living standard by spending 12 hours a day as a bank employee and as a minor official in the provincial Finance Ministry.

Although he voted for the late Juan Domingo Peron, like most Argentines, three years ago, Mr. Rojas now blames the Peronists for the country's economic and political problems.

At the same time, he is neither euphoric over the military coup nor particularly opposed to it.

Military Coup 'Inevitable'

"It was inevitable that the army would come back again," said Mr. Rojas. "They did not do much all those years they were in power. All I am asking is that they don't let things get worse. Let them put an end to the violence. Let them do something about inflation. And then let them go back to the barracks."

The violence comes from both the political right and left. Like most people in Cordoba, Mr. Rojas is convinced that the kidnapping and murder of about 70 trade unionists and guerrilla suspects in the city in the last three months have been the work of police and military intelligence agents.

Two leaders of Mr. Rojas's own union of bank employees were kidnapped by right-wing terrorists last week. A protest strike has kept the banks closed since then.

Mr. Rojas is equally vehement about left-wing terrorism. He says he sees no sense in the bombing and kidnapping of business executives, and the murder of policemen. He does not think the guerrillas have even a vague vision of the kind of political and economic system they would like to impose on the country.

"This is not Cuba or some poor tropical country," said Mr. Rojas. "This is Argentina."

He repeated the litany that every Argentine knows by heart—that this is a country of boundless agricultural wealth and industrial potential, with the best educated, best dressed and best fed people in Latin America.

Then suddenly, as so many Argentines do in these times of despair, he let loose a tirade of deprecation.

Making Ends Meet

"But this will never be a great country," he said. "Nobody can agree on anything. No matter who is in power, he will fill his pockets and look out for himself."

In the last three years, Mr. Rojas has seen a bewildering succession of ineffectual governments in Cordoba. He voted for a left-wing Peronist, Ricardo Obregon Cano, who was elected governor in March 1973.

A year later, Mr. Obregon Cano, unable to control disputes within the local Peronist movement, was deposed by an uprising headed by the police and right-wing Peronists, with General Peron's backing.

The four appointed governors who followed in office ranged from conservative hacks to declared fascists.

Along the way, Mr. Rojas says he lost interest in policivilian and military Cabinet, a junta spokesman said.

Banks and exchange houses, closed after the coup, will not reopen before the appointment of a Minister of Economy, who is expected to be José Martínez Acindar, Argentina's largest private steel company.

Schools were closed for the second day, but parks and playgrounds were full of children who had been turned loose by their parents without fear.

Censorship Is Lifted

Signs of government relaxation were the lifting of prior censorship imposed on all newspapers yesterday, the reopening of movie houses and theaters, and authorization for sporting events. Horse races and football games drew large crowds.

There were still large numbers of troops and tanks in the streets. Traffic going in and out of Buenos Aires was often delayed by checkpoints as soldiers searched cars and trucks for arms or suspicious persons.

A military source said that as many as 300 persons have been held since the military began their occupation of this capital Tuesday night.

The success of the military operation, in which officers have taken over all provincial governorships as well as the Federal Government without resistance contrasted with the political violence under Mrs. Peron in which at least 1,500 people died in 20 months.

But the easing of tensions still left many Argentines waiting for the military to say what happens next on the major problem facing the country—recovery from an economic crisis reflected in an inflation that raised prices 33 percent last year and is still growing.

Military officers designated by the junta occupied ministries and state enterprises, as well as union offices, to assess

A STOPGAP BUDGET IS VOTED IN JAPAN

TOKYO, March 25 (UPI)—Japan's opposition parties agreed today to call off their boycott of Parliament long enough to help the Government pass a stopgap budget designed to keep the country running for 40 days.

However, the Socialist, Communist and Komeito parties said they would not take part in debate on a budget for the full year until the Government agreed to disclose all the names of persons involved in the head Aircraft payoff deal.

The three main opposition parties and the smaller Civic Socialist Party but weeks of Parliamentary disclosure of the scandal.

Iceland Raises Vodka to $21 And Cigarettes Go to $1.20

REYKJAVIK, Iceland, March 25 (UPI)—The Government has announced price increases that are bad news for Icelanders.

While watching television in their heated homes, liquor, the Government said, goes up 15 percent, bringing the price of a bottle of vodka to $21. A pack of cigarettes also goes up 15 percent to $1.20 and state licenses for television sets will cost 30 percent more—$85 a year for a weekly total of 24 hours of black and white programs.

After paying 30 percent more for the bus home—an average 30 cents a trip—commuters also may find the living room temperature a little lower following a 27 percent increase in the price of hot water, which the Government gets free from the multitude of hot water springs dotting the volcanic island. The hot water supplies heating for 90 percent of all buildings in Reykjavik.

Buyers and browsers crowd a Tokyo bookstore at noon

Japan's Reading Craze At a Peak in Recession

By ANDREW H. MALCOLM
Special to The New York Times

TOKYO, March 25 — The aisles were crammed with bodies struggling to move in the crush. Occasionally a door opened to admit fresh air. But anyone leaving was replaced quickly.

It was not the famed Tokyo subway at rush hour. It was a Tokyo bookstore at noon hour, the time when office workers by the thousands buy thousands of volumes to feed the voracious Japanese appetite for reading books.

Now, at time of recession while the number of bankruptcies and unemployed soars to record heights, Japan's 3,000 book publishers are enjoying another superior sales year, despite what some see as disturbing shifts in public reading taste.

Literacy Nearly Universal

The Japanese public, with a virtually universal literacy rate, has been traditionally book-oriented ever since metal type and the printing press arrived 105 years ago. Initially, books were a means of catching up with centuries of development that had passed by feudal Japan. Reading, which is emphasized in schools and quickly becomes a daily habit, also provides an easy escape from the tense city life that dominates Japan.

As a result, it seems, everyone here has a book at hand ready to read at the slightest excuse—during an hour-long train trip, a 40-minute subway ride, a 20-second spotlight or even during brief escalator rides.

And now with the inflated costs of weekend holidays, restaurant dinners and other family diversions beyond the financial reach of many, the popularity of cheaper entertainment such as books is growing.

In 1974 income from book sales grew by almost one-third. Last year sales jumped more than 16 percent.

Six Books a Year

With libraries playing a minor role, the Japanese now are personally buying books at the rate of 666 million a year, or more than a half dozen volumes for every living citizen. To equate that, Americans would have to buy almost 1.3 billion books.

As a result, book publishing in Japan is not a business, it is an industry. And with 21,000 new titles annually it does more than a $1.4 billion business a year.

"There was a general expectation that book sales would decline during the recession," said Toshiyuki Hatori, vice president of Kodansha, the largest publisher, "but these are actually the best years we have had since the war."

"I come here several times a week," Yukiko Sakakura, a 24-year-old computer programmer, said above the audible rustling of pages in a crowded Ginza bookstore. She buys 10 books a month. And she is not unusual.

"Expensive" Book Is $10
Miss Sakakura can choose from paperback retails for $1 to $3 or "expensive" hardcovers costing up to $10. Today's book sales, advertised on TV and subway placards, are concentrated in the lower ranges.

Swashbuckling historical novels of sword-swinging conspiratorial but honor-bound Samurai warriors are always popular, like the ubiquitous tales of Western gunfighters in the United States.

Booksellers, who can have a special book order delivered from the warehouse in a matter of hours, report that science fiction and detective story sales have weakened while books published to celebrate the American Bicentennial seem increasingly popular.

"Some people seem to be seeking some guidance from books," said Yoshimoto Takahashi, manager of one of Japan's 20,000 bookshops. "They get books on serious subjects like religion or pollution. Books on health foods and drinks sell very well, too, but not for long."

Trend Causing Concern
But the best sellers of the future may have less to do with words and much more to do with pictures. The manga gensho, or cartoon phenomenon, has begun to sweep the Japanese publishing industry.

Long lists of these new paperback titles, some of them actually collections of prewar magazine cartoon series are tumbling off the presses for release in the next few weeks.

The books sell for about $1 and depict tales of adventure or romance. But sometimes they carry graphic portrayals of beheadings or violent sexual acts.

"I consider this development unfortunate for Japan," said Yoshio Nishitani, publisher of Mitrissha, a small house with about 60 new titles a year.

"This mindless cartoon phenomenon is all part of the developing postcard culture," the publisher said in an interview in his office which was piled high with books and manuscripts. "We are shifting from a culture of readers to one of watchers. I think the number of people who can think for themselves will decrease. This is a very serious problem for the future."

Many intellectuals trace this development to the widespread use of television, which they say not only consumes time that might otherwise be spent reading, but encourages a passive form of learning instead of an active quest for knowledge. The generation reaching adulthood now, they note, is the first exposed to TV for their entire life.

One of the many firms planning to exploit the cartoon craze is Kodansha. In addition to its three quarterly magazines, its 15 monthlies, its four weeklies and its special magazine issues, the firm publishes three new books every day of the year.

Saigon Rationing Gasoline: Black Market Is a Target

SAIGON, South Vietnam, March 25 (Agence France-Press)—The authorities have imposed gasoline rationing in the Saigon region.

A reliable source said that private cars would be restricted to 20 liters—about 5 gallons—of gasoline each month. The rationing was designed to slow the excessive consumption of gasoline in Saigon and to eliminate the black market in it.

The price of gasoline varies according to whether it is distributed through state channels or on the free market. The rationing applies to the free market.

SOVIET HARASSING IS CHARGED BY U.S.

Protest Lists a Bomb Hoax at Embassy in Moscow and Telephone Threats

By CHRISTOPHER S. WREN
Special to The New York Times

MOSCOW, March 25 — The United States has protested to the Soviet Union over the harassment of American diplomats in Moscow, including a bomb hoax and other telephone calls this week threatening reprisals for incidents against Soviet officials in New York.

The bomb threat, which is highly unusual for Moscow, was made today. The first two floors of the American embassy and a nursery school in the basement were evacuated but no bomb was found.

The harassment began earlier this week when about 70 phone calls, many in the middle of the night, were made to some 25 American diplomats by persons describing themselves as Soviet citizens protesting the treatment of Soviet officials by Jewish militants in New York and warning of possible retaliation. A well-placed diplomat said the calls included some threats of car damage while one hinted at shooting and another at harm to a diplomat's children.

Today the embassy disclosed that it filed an initial protest yesterday over the telephone harassment. It followed up this afternoon by handing Foreign Ministry officials another more detailed protest that referred to the bomb scare as well as to the telephone threats. An embassy spokesman expressed belief that the harassment had the "official sanction, support and encouragement" of Soviet authorities.

This view was generally shared by other non-American diplomats who learned of the incidents today. The telephone numbers of diplomats are kept unlisted by Soviet authorities and even the embassy number is not available to average Russians. Diplomats are also kept under strict enough surveillance that they are unlikely to be harassed without official knowledge.

Children Evacuated

Some American diplomats today wondered whether the new harassment would increase to the level of tension in 1970 and 1971, when some threats were carried out. A number of cars belonging to American diplomats and correspondents were badly damaged by vandals in retaliation for actions by Jewish militants against Soviet diplomats in the United States.

The new warnings have not produced any such attacks, though one American diplomat noted that this might be because no Soviet cars were vandalized in the United States recently. Also no American businessmen or journalists are known to have been threatened yet by phone.

The current incidents come at a time when Moscow has taken a firmer line toward Washington following the dispute over Soviet involvement in Angola. The Soviet press has stepped up its criticism of the United States, expressing particular pique with the American re-examination of the detente relationship.

Today's bomb threat, which one diplomat believed was the first since the trouble in 1971, was telephoned at 12:05 P.M. to a Marine guard on duty at the reception desk. The anonymous caller warned in unaccented English that a four-pound block of C-4, a plastic explosive, would explode on the first floor at 12:27 P.M. and hang up.

About 50 persons from the cultural, administrative and consular sections were evacuated into the courtyard. Over a dozen nursery school children in a basement class-room were led out to the detached medical dispensary. Others in the nursery building were unaffected.

The telephone campaign began on Monday night and peaked on Tuesday night. The Russian-speaking callers, who identified themselves as "citizen" or "worker," warned American diplomats that they could get the same treatment Soviet diplomats got in New York.

One diplomat said the caller told him, "Our people are having a hard time and things could get worse for you." When another diplomat asked who was calling, he was told, "My name does not play a role in this."

The Soviet Government has protested four times in the last month over incidents in New York, including demonstrations in front of the Soviet mission to the United Nations, the bombing of the Aeroflot office and the shooting into an official's residence.

Death Sentence Imposed

BOISE, Idaho, March 25 (AP)—Thomas Eugene Creech was sentenced today to be hanged on May 21 for the 1974 murders of two itinerant painters. An appeal was expected to delay the sentence.

ponent of Britain's entry into the Common Market.

Mr. Callaghan, a man with an engaging campaign style, a champion of party unity who is not known for ideological passion or brilliance. Adding his faults and virtues together, he is seen as the logical custodian of Mr. Wilson's efforts to win a consensus within the party to dampen inflation and restore some credibility to the British economy.

Mr. Healey, an ardent leftist in his student days who this year has won new support among party moderates by his firm stance against inflation, his willingness to channel funds to private industry even at the expense of cherished social programs, and his ability to defend these views with an almost abrasive vigor.

All Backed Wilson Policy

The one thing all three have in common is that they have supported Mr. Wilson's recent economic policies, particularly the effort to persuade unions to limit wage demands to £6 ($12) a week to arrest Britain's ruinous inflation. They also call themselves socialists, and are united in their efforts to keep the Conservatives out of office.

What separates them is as much a matter of style as substance: Mr. Foot, 63 years old with flowing white hair, is advertised as the conscience of the left. Mr. Callaghan, who will be 64 on Saturday, has run the Home Office, the Treasury and the Foreign Office. He represents experience, safety and conciliation.

James Callaghan

Michael Foot

Denis Healey

Mr. Healey, 58, is the outspoken pragmatist who, in the words of one observer, "by knocking skulls together might be just the man to pull the economy and the country around." He has feuded bitterly with the party's left, which opposes his projected cuts in public expenditure.

The immediate tactical question is who will finish at the bottom of the second round. Mr. Foot may still lead, since he is likely to pick up most if not all of Mr. Benn's votes, but far fewer from Mr. Crossland and Mr. Jenkins, both of whom draw support from the center and right.

Even so, it will not be easy for Mr. Foot to achieve the required majority—159 votes if all 317 eligible members of the Labor Party vote, or 158 if the 314 members of the party who voted tonight do so next week.

Maneuvering Expected

Accordingly, the focus of the maneuvering that will take place during the next few days in the corridors of Parliament will be the Callaghan-Healey struggle to produce a single champion of the center-right.

And the question is: Which of the two will pick up Mr. Jenkins's and Mr. Crossland's votes?

The best estimates tonight were that Mr. Callaghan would pick up most of them, forcing Mr. Healey out of the race. But the Healey strategists were not giving up. He is a man with a gift for persuasion, and Mr. Jenkins is said to regard him as brighter and more imaginative than Mr. Callaghan.

A crucial point is that the candidates who have withdrawn do not have any real control over their allies. Neither Mr. Jenkins, Mr. Crossland nor Mr. Benn can automatically order his supporters to shift their votes in any given direction.

Ballots for the second round of voting were mailed to members tonight and are to be returned by mail over the weekend. The results will be announced Tuesday.

Each candidate has a manager, who confines his efforts to telephone calls and earnest little chats in the Commons tea-room.

The comments tonight by some of the candidates indicate the low-key form in which they have been carrying the fight. Mr. Jenkins said he was withdrawing because it would speed an "early decision as to who would be the next Prime Minister."

Mr. Crossland said only that he was "disappointed" in his poor showing. Mr. Callaghan, who can figure the odds as well as anyone, was similarly brief when asked about the result. He smiled and said, "Very good."

City U. Plan to End Major Study in Languages Evokes Protests

By JUDITH CUMMINGS

The proposed elimination of major programs in foreign languages except Spanish at some of the City University's senior colleges would deprive students of needed communication skills and cultural experience, supporters of language study at the university asserted yesterday.

Richard Brod, a spokesman for the Modern Language Association, said that any reduction in students' opportunity to major in languages would unfairly assume that the growing Spanish-speaking student body at the university is interested only in its native language and would not benefit from the same exposure to foreign languages that other groups have enjoyed.

Mr. Brod spoke at a news conference sponsored by the association at the university's Graduate Center, 33 West 42d Street. The session was organized to protest the changes in language programs proposed in the restructuring plan of Dr. Robert J. Kibbee, the university chancellor.

The chancellor's plan was also protested by students and faculty members of Hostos Community College in the Bronx—which is slated for closing under the proposal—in a takeover of the college facilities by about 500 people.

Leaders of the protest said they would remain on the premises until the Board of Higher Education gave them a

Soviet Trade Staff Finds a Time Bomb Outside Office Here

A time bomb was discovered yesterday morning by an employee of the Amtorg Trading Corporation, the Soviet trade agency, on a fire escape of the company's Lexington Avenue office, 12 hours after the police went through the building following a telephoned bomb threat.

Responsibility for the bomb was claimed by a group calling itself the Jewish Armed Resistance in a message sent to the Jewish Defense League giving alleged details of the bomb's components. The Jewish Defense League, which has harassed Soviet diplomats and personnel in the city to protest against the treatment of Jews in the Soviet Union, disclaimed any connection with the other group.

The Associated Press received a call Wednesday evening from the so-called Jewish Armed Resistance saying a bomb was in the building at 355 Lexington Avenue, at 41st Street, where Amtorg occupies the 13th floor. The building was searched, but no bomb was found.

Witness in Hoffa Inquiry Invokes Fifth Amendment

DETROIT, March 25 (AP)—Charles O'Brien says he took the Fifth Amendment during his appearance yesterday before a Federal grand jury investigating the teamster's union and the disappearance of James R. Hoffa, its former president.

Mr. O'Brien said after his appearance that he was asked about Mr. Hoffa and about his own role as administrator of Teamsters Local 212, a now-defunct local that represented automobile salesmen. Mr. O'Brien said he thought the Government was studying allegations of payoffs by auto dealers to the union.

NEWARK, March 25 (UPI)—Hundreds of New Jersey residents have been questioned since Mr. Hoffa disappeared last July, but no concrete leads have developed, it was said today by Louis A. Giovanetta, special agent in charge of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in the state.

Tests of Flu Vaccine Expected in April

By HAROLD M. SCHEMCK Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 25—First tests in humans of vaccine against the new influenza virus are expected to begin about mid-April, a Government scientist said today.

The outcome of these tests, called clinical trials, will have a strong influence on the rest of the timetable for the nationwide flu immunization program announced yesterday by President Ford.

Experts from Government, industry and the scientific community in general met here today to discuss the problems and prospects of quickly producing huge amounts of vaccine for the virus, which was discovered only a month ago. The meeting was organized by the Bureau of Biologics of the Food and Drug Administration. The bureau is responsible for licensing vaccines.

After the meeting, Dr. Harry M. Meyer Jr., director of the bureau, said clinical trials should begin roughly in mid-April and that some large commercial lots of vaccine could be completed by June.

Thereafter, a tentative timetable would call for immunization during the late summer of persons in high-risk groups such as the elderly and persons suffering from chronic diseases, such as heart disease.

Large-scale immunization of the general public would be expected to start in the fall, and the bulk of the effort might be completed by Christmas, Dr. Meyer said.

be borne by the Federal Government. However, private doctors may charge a fee for administering it. No details have yet been worked out for the mass immunization programs.

The major vaccine makers have already produced small amounts of the virus from which finished vaccine is to be produced. They are working with the virus to see how efficiently it will grow in fertilized chicken eggs—the normal process for producing influenza virus for vaccine. The efficiency of virus growth will have a strong bearing on production schedules.

Another determinant will be the effectiveness with which the vaccine virus promotes protective antibody production in humans. This is a factor to be assessed in the clinical trials. It helps decide how much virus material must be put in a dose of the vaccine.

the only thoroughly documented case of human-to-human transmission of the virus.

The consensus of expert advisors to President Ford on this issue appeared to be that it was more prudent to gamble on the cost and other problems of a nationwide campaign than to risk being unprepared next winter if the virus does become widespread.

The President's decision yesterday has already drawn some criticism both on political and public health grounds. Some doctors have questioned whether the evidence warrants the nationwide immunization effort. Some members of Congress reportedly believe they should have been included in the consultation before the decision was made.

The President asked for an appropriation of $135 million to insure that sufficient vaccine was produced to immunize every American who wanted it. Serious opposition to this in the Congress is considered unlikely.

Fort Dix Discovery

In Atlanta, a spokesman for the Federal Government's Center for Disease Control, said it was working with state health officials, the American Medical Association and pharmaceutical concerns to deal with the problem of vaccine distribution. A meeting for state health officers will be held at the center on April 2.

The new influenza virus, discovered at Fort Dix, N.J., in mid-February has been a particular concern to public health experts because it appears to be closely related to the virus that causes influenza in pigs. The so-called swine influenza virus is widely believed to have been the cause of the great world outbreak of flu of 1918-19.

No one knows whether the newly found virus is likely to behave like the 1918 virus or even whether it will spread throughout the country to become the predominant cause of flu next winter.

A specialist from the Center for Disease Control said today the Fort Dix outbreak was still

W.H.O. Aides Surprised

GENEVA, March 25 (AP)—Officials at World Health Organization headquarters reacted with surprise today to President Ford's announcement of a $135 million plan to vaccinate 200 million Americans against swine flu virus.

The organization said a month ago that there was no evidence that the virus, which took 20 million lives around the world in 1918, was spreading.

The officials declined further comment pending talks with United States experts on the project, which a spokesman said could have "worldwide implications."

The spokesman said he knew of no other country considering similar plans, and emphasized that there has been no appearance of the virus outside the Fort Dix, N.J., Army camp where one 19-year-old private died of the flu last month.

W.H.O. centers in Atlanta and London have started work on preparing a vaccine.

costs. Many smaller concerns are vulnerable to collapse if labor costs should go up sharply.

The 16,000 concerns represented by Trucking Employers Inc., an umbrella group that is negotiating for the industry, are also facing increasing competition from a growing number of nonunion companies.

In addition, the Ford Administration has proposed to regulate the freight rates of the industry, now set by the Interstate Commerce Commission. This step would bring down rates and increase competition further.

The latest offer by the industry breaks down as follows: Hourly wage increases over three years totaling 85 cents—45 cents in the first year and 20 cents in each of the next two years. Workers affected by the contract now get $7.18 to $7.33 an hour.

Union's Final Offer

A rise in the limit of the cost-of-living allowance from 11 cents a year to 25 cents in the second and third years, with a guaranteed minimum of 15 cents each year.

Weekly contributions for the health and welfare fund of $3 per worker and weekly contributions for the pension fund of $8 over three years.

At a meeting with 700 delegates yesterday, Mr. Fitzsimmons, speaking on behalf of the bargaining committee, recommended that the offer be rejected and that a strike vote be taken at the locals. The delegates unanimously endorsed this view and most went back home to prepare for the vote.

The union countered with a final compromise offer whose details were as follows:

A raise in the hourly rate of 75 cents for the first year, two 25-cent raises in the second year, and two 25-cent raises in the third year, for a total of $1.75.

In the cost-of-living allowance no payment in the first year but one payment with no limit in the second and third years.

Weekly contributions of $8 a week to the health and welfare fund and $9 to the pension fund.

Teamster Negotiations Held Difficult

By AGIS SALPUKAS
Special to The New York Times

ARLINGTON HEIGHTS, Ill., March 25—Most teamster leaders and delegates meeting here on new contract negotiations seem agreed that this year's contract talks are the most difficult in the last several decades.

The two key money issues that must be resolved in the discussions between the International Brotherhood of Teamsters and the trucking industry are a 90-cent difference in hourly wages and protection against rises in the cost of living.

Both sides have put their proposals on the table and are awaiting the outcome of a vote by 360 teamster locals throughout the nation on Saturday and Sunday. The vote will determine whether the teamster bargaining committee can call a strike if there is no settlement reached by midnight next Wednesday, when the present contract runs out.

The outcome of the negotiations will have wide effects not only on the union and trucking industry but also on the over-all economy.

The union's bargaining committee represents 450,000 members covered by what is known as the National Master Freight Agreement.

Cost-of-Living Limit

The average teamster, the union estimates, has lost 75 cents an hour in wages over the last three years because of a limit on a cost-of-living increase of 11 cents a year in the contract signed in 1973.

Many locals have had layoffs during the recession, and their members, unlike workers in other industries such as auto and steel, did not get supplementary unemployment benefits. Therefore, there is great pressure from the union's members to deliver a good money package.

There is added pressure on Frank E. Fitzsimmons, the president of the teamsters, to deliver because he faces re-election at the union convention in June.

The trucking industry, on the other hand, has suffered from the recession and higher fuel fund over three years.

The union is also asking that if employers hire "casual" workers—those who work on and off—the employers pay $12.10 a day into the pension and health funds.

This demand is expected to be resisted by the employers, who have used casuals to cut costs and to fill in for absentee workers, a major problem in the industry.

The union is also demanding side benefits such as that all road tractors be air-conditioned by April 1978 and that drivers not be doubled up in motel rooms.

The industry negotiators have warned union leaders that a big settlement would make them vulnerable to competition from nonunion concerns and urged that the union organize these concerns first before making big demands.

A strike would almost certainly be halted for 80 days by an injunction from the Ford Administration under the emergency provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act. This could increase support for bottled-up bills in Congress that call for compulsory arbitration in vital industries such as trucking.

Another union problem is that for the first time in recent history it is facing a small but well-organized effort by several dissident rank-and-file groups to put pressure on the negotiators for a good settlement.

Dutch Ask 7 1/2-Year Term in South Moluccan Trial

AMSTERDAM, March 25 (UPI)—A Dutch prosecutor today demanded prison terms of seven and a half years for seven South Moluccan youths who seized and held the Indonesian consulate and 25 hostages for 16 days in December.

The youths have pleaded guilty to charges of illegal possession of arms, threatening hostages and deprivation of liberty, a charge comparable to kidnapping.

They had the three-judge court that they had seized the consulate to emphasize demands for their island homeland's independence from Indonesia.

Planning Two More $1 Billion Carriers Amid Debate Over Their Effectiveness in a Major War

NEW MIDDLETON—A group of naval officers and analysts are questioning the effectiveness of the carrier in a major war, challenging the view of a Navy "carrier admiral" today.

Admiral LaRoque is the director of the Center for Defense Information. Admiral Holloway believes that carriers, like all ships, are vulnerable but that their antisubmarine aircraft and their protective fighters reduce their vulnerability and that of other ships in the squadron.

These protective missions obviously reduce the strength of the carriers' offensive operations. Sixty percent of a carrier's weapons systems are intended for the defense of the vessel.

The vulnerability of the carrier in modern war is a critical point in the argument.

The Navy asserts that Nimitz-class vessels are the "best protected and least vulnerable carriers ever designed" because of added protection provided by the extensive use of armor against bombs and guided missiles, as well as by improved antitorpedo-protection design.

Statistics show that of 20 carriers damaged in World War

II by Japanese attack, only the Yorktown was sunk directly by the enemy forces.

The Secretary of the Navy, J. William Middendorf 2d, said recently that the Nimitz has a series of styrofoam compartments at the waterline that would allow her to take 10 torpedoes "without slowing down" and that hits from 10 of the Soviet Union's heaviest antiship missiles from aircraft, ships or submarines would render a modern carrier inoperative for only about two hours.

Critics respond with two arguments. The first is that the carrier admirals and their supporters are ignoring or discounting the increases since 1945 in the accuracy and deadliness of antiship weapons—missiles, torpedoes and bombs.

"The Air Force and the Army say that, with the new precision guided munitions, what they can see they can hit," an officer of a surface ship said. "Isn't that going to be true in naval warfare?"

Mr. Middendorf did acknowledge that the Russians are "terribly effective." Admiral LaRoque pointed out one possible example of such effectiveness.

A torpedo hitting one of the Nimitz's propellers, the admiral said, would slow the carrier so she could not fly combat operations. "Any carrier needs 30 knots of wind over the flight deck, if she is to launch aircraft with a full fuel and bomb load," he said. "Without the wind, they can't handle it."

Aircraft carriers' importance as a projection of American power around the world in peace or war is stressed by the big ships' supporters.

Increasingly, however, the record shows that the appearance of carriers in trouble spots is counterproductive. The arrival of the carrier Enterprise in the Bay of Bengal in the Bangladesh war of independence produced a storm of protest from the Indian Government. Visits of carriers to friendly ports nowadays are more likely to inspire left-wing protests than popular approval.

In a war with the Soviet Union, the carriers' chief mission would be the support of the embattled Atlantic Pact forces in western Europe.

Carrier enthusiasts assert that a "surge" of carriers and their escorts will carry the fleet to within striking distance of Soviet targets. Critics are dubious. They point out that the growing size of the Soviet submarine fleet and the deployment of high-performance long-range bombers like Backfire, as NATO has code-named one, will make this operation highly hazardous.

In a nuclear war the carriers' role is likely to be secondary. The Defense Department's Single Integrated Operations Plan does not assign targets to the nuclear-capable aircraft aboard the carriers in the initial phase. Only after the other strategic nuclear weapons have been launched would these planes come into play.

The Navy's carrier admirals often justify their emphasis on the vessels by pointing out that the Russians are building three, but these 45,000-ton carriers, according to Western intelligence sources, are not strike carriers but are designed for antisubmarine warfare and fleet protection operations.

INTRODUCING AN OIL THAT SAVES YOU GAS.

Mobil 1 synthesized engine lubricant is an entirely new kind of motor oil.

It's man-made. We created new molecules to build an engine lubricant that's tougher than ordinary motor oil.

Even though Mobil 1 looks like motor oil and smells like motor oil, it's really a revolutionary lubricant that outperforms ordinary motor oil.

Mobil 1 saves gas. The first big advantage of Mobil 1 is that it saves gas. Mobil 1 lubricates the moving parts of your engine better than ordinary oil. Since it reduces friction and drag in the engine, you can get more miles out of every tankful of gas. In fact, Mobil 1 will give the average car up to 10 extra miles per tankful.

Mobil 1 saves oil. But Mobil 1 does a lot more than just save gas. It also saves oil (if your engine's in good mechanical condition, of course).

Mobil 1 doesn't evaporate as fast as ordinary motor oil, even at high engine temperatures. As a result, you use less oil. In both city and highway fleet tests, Mobil 1 cut oil consumption up to 25%.

Mobil 1 saves your engine. Mobil 1 protects your engine better than ordinary motor oil. To prove it, we put Mobil 1 in a fleet of highway patrol cars for 12,000 miles. Then we tested the "used" Mobil 1 against ordinary motor oil. Mobil 1 still protected the engine like the brand-new ordinary oil.

And Mobil 1 not only helps your car's engine last longer. It helps it run cleaner. We've added a detergent to Mobil 1 that outperforms detergents found in ordinary oil. Our tests showed that with Mobil 1 you'll have less engine sludge.

Mobil 1 improves high temperature performance. Ordinary motor oil thins out at very high temperatures. Mobil 1, however, will continue to spread a protective film over the moving parts of your engine even if the temperature on the outside is 110 degrees F. And the temperature inside the engine is 580 degrees F.

Mobil 1 improves cold weather starts. In extremely cold temperatures, ordinary motor oil becomes so thick your engine can't turn over. But Mobil 1, even at 35 degrees below zero, will continue to flow and help you start your engine more easily.

So no matter what kind of car you drive, or how hard you drive it, or what kind of weather you drive it in, Mobil 1 is the best motor oil you can buy.

The oil that saves you gas.

Ford-Reagan Race: Similarity in Views

By JAMES M. NAUGHTON

LOS ANGELES, March 25 — A young woman giggled the other night as she greeted Ronald Reagan at a campaign rally in Green Bay, Wis., by holding up a hand-lettered placard that said, "Reagan can chew gum and walk at the same time."

The challenger, relying on a chartered airplane, buses frequently equipped with governors, an occasional telephone and a scheduler determined to locate the longest distance between two points, seems to spend most of his time in transit. On one egregiously slow and long motorcade in Wisconsin earlier this week, a Reagan aide joked that it was intentional, a means to "show motion."

There is a central difference between Mr. Ford and Mr. Reagan, it is over the issue of détente between Washington and Moscow. The former Governor is expected to make this issue the focus of his television speech. Yet even that issue may be more circumstantial than substantial.

The nub of Mr. Reagan's complaint is that Mr. Ford, abetted, if not guided, by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, has permitted the Soviet Union to surpass the United States in military might and to get the better of Washington in the fruits of rapprochement.

In anticipation of and in response to Mr. Reagan's candidacy, the President has publicly dropped the word "détente," but not the policy. He has also contended that the Soviet Union and Cuba were able to intervene in Angola only because Congress had blocked American assistance, insisted that he was being a "Yankee trader" in his pursuit of "peace through strength" at the bargaining table and has asked Congress for the largest Pentagon budget in history.

Mr. Ford may well be more zealous about détente than Mr. Reagan would be if he were in the White House. Yet Mr. Reagan has given signs that there are limits on the intensity and, by inference, the extent of his criticism.

A recurring Reagan theme is that Mr. Ford should prove the sincerity of his increasingly rightist rhetoric by asking for instance, that the Organization of American States quarantine Cuba. But when asked if he would recommend using American troops if necessary to block Cuban military action in Africa or persistently declined to answer on ground that he is not privy, as is Mr. Ford, to all the necessary intelligence data.

Some Differences There are, to be sure, differences in the two campaigns. Mr. Ford has only one sure-fire applause line—"A government big enough to give you everything you want is a government big enough to take away everything you have."

Representative Morris K. Udall, center, speaking to a crowd at the Chesapeake & Ohio railroad ferry slip in Manitowish, Wis., that has been out of service for about a year, with a considerable loss of local jobs.

Udall Enjoys Wisconsin Crowds but Problems Persist

By CHARLES MOHR

NEENAH, Wis., March 25 — Representative Morris K. Udall is not a particularly demonstrative man, but yesterday he began to show the exhilaration that candidates feel from the political adrenalin of bigger crowds and a growing volume of applause.

The Arizona Democrat, who is seeking the Presidential nomination, drew overflow crowds that seemed to respond to his appeal that his banner was the only rallying place left for liberal Democrats.

But then, after a long day of crisscrossing the state in a wheezy old DC-3, Mr. Udall returned to Milwaukee about the time the early edition of The Milwaukee Sentinel went on sale. The newspaper carried an eight-column headline—and a four-column picture—on a routine news conference held that morning by one of his rivals for the nomination, Jimmy Carter, the former Governor of Georgia.

Near the bottom of the page, a modestly displayed article saying Mr. Udall had returned to Wisconsin "looking for a shot in the arm."

The episode illustrated one of Mr. Udall's general problems as he approaches what he calls a "crucial" test in the Wisconsin Presidential primary election on April 6 and the New York primary the same day.

He has not been an active candidate in a primary since Massachusetts on March 2—and the fact that he ran ahead of Mr. Carter there, and not far behind him in New Hampshire earlier, appears to have been almost forgotten.

Now things are more difficult for Mr. Udall because of the priceless national attention and unquestionable "momentum" that Mr. Carter has earned with three straight weeks of primary victories from Florida to Illinois to North Carolina.

Some things are working on Mr. Udall's behalf. Although Mr. Carter is spending less time in Wisconsin, he is spending enough time and getting enough publicity yesterday to make this a meaningful contest with what Mr. Udall called "a full cast of characters."

Capital Times, Mr. Carter "I doubt if I would even it. The American people stand Watergate. I think are sick of it. They are rassed by it. Despite Urban Image, New York Is a Varied State

By FRANK LYNN

Sitting amid the clutter and noise at the Manhattan headquarters of Representative Morris K. Udall, John Martilla, a Udall campaign consultant, said that he hoped to have $300,000 available for the New York Presidential primary April 6 and a similar amount for the Wisconsin primary the same day.

That would allow us to run a full campaign in Wisconsin and a holding operation here," Mr. Martilla said. The remark pointed up the vastness of New York, the second most populous state in the union, whose 62 counties spread from the Atlantic Ocean to Lake Erie and Canada.

Outsiders Think of Concrete But mention New York to an out-of-stater and most will think of New York City, skyscrapers, and cork City. The city with its population of 7.5 million—42 percent of the state population—often does appear to be the tail wagging the dog. It is the business and financial center and the principal gateway not only to the state but to the nation.

Large 'Bedroom' Counties Yet, there is a great deal of New York State outside the city—58 percent of the population and growing. Just east of the city, two suburban "bedroom" counties on Long Island, Nassau and Suffolk, have a population of 2.6 million—just behind Los Angeles, the third most populated city in the country.

Conservation Unit Marks Dozen in House for Defeat

By GLADWIN HILL
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 25—Environmental militants fired their first salvo of the political campaign today, naming a "Dozen" House members they said should be defeated because of what the environmentalists viewed as poor voting records on ecological issues.

The list was headed by the House minority leader, John J. Rhodes of Arizona, who called the categorization "phony." It included Representative Burt L. Talcott, Republican of California, targeted for the second time, who called the rating system "dishonest."

The targets were announced by Environmental Action, a Washington-based nonpartisan lobbying and educational organization, which has promulgated "Dirty Dozen" lists in the last three national campaigns. Of 31 members of Congress named on past lists—some having figures in more than one election—19 were defeated.

The others on the new list were Representatives Samuel L. Devine of Ohio, named for the third time; Donald D. Clancy of Ohio, James C. Cleveland of New Hampshire, Charles C. Grassley of Kentucky and Steven Symms of Idaho, all Republicans, and Goodie E. Byron of Maryland, John J. Flynt Jr. of Georgia and Richard White of Texas, all Democrats.

They were named primarily on the basis of 14 environmental votes in Congress last year on strip mining, water resources, atomic power, solar energy, energy conservation, automobile and appliance efficiency, pesticide regulation, transit financing and super-sound.

Eight Filed on Time
Beyond protecting the 33 Jackson candidates, today's decision was important for Senator Jackson because the 68 at-large New York State delegates will be divided in proportion to the candidates showing in the primary.

Originally, there were 42 Jackson delegates, led by Sandra L. Berg of Queens, who went to court to challenge the Secretary of State's decision that they would have to be listed as uncommitted. The most prominent in the group was Daniel P. Moynihan, the former United States representative at the United Nations, who is running at the top of a Jackson slate in the Bronx and whose "certificate of preference" arrived at the Secretary of State's office two days after the deadline and without a postmark.

Upon re-examination, eight of the 42 were found to have filed their certificates on time. One, an alternate in the 16th Congressional District in Brooklyn, was found not to have filed a certificate at all and so will run as uncommitted. In deciding that the 33 who did in fact miss the deadline should be reinstated, Justice Staley cited an earlier state court decision that said the election law "should not be so interpreted as to defeat the very object of its enactment."

Twenty-two of those reinstated are delegates; the 11 others are alternates. Most of them are from Long Island, Queens and Brooklyn. The various last-minute changes on the ballot, meanwhile, have wreaked havoc on the city's Board of Elections. A state law requires the board to rotate candidates' positions on the ballot, so a candidate whose slate is on the bottom in one Congressional District is guaranteed the favored top position in another.

Representative Burt L. Talcott, California Republican, objecting to his inclusion in the "Dirty Dozen" list.

Other factors considered in selecting the 12, said Dennis Bass, director of the campaign, were the individuals' seniority and committee positions and the prospects of mobilizing local opposition to them. Environmental Action spent $30,000 in 1974 defeating eight of 12 "Dirty Dozen" designees. This year it plans an expanded operation, with Martha Foley, an experienced Washington campaign technician, as field organizer.

Mr. Rhodes, in a statement issued by his office, called the listing a cheap publicity gimmick and a phony test of environmental concern." He said that he and some other members of Congress were asking the Fair Campaign Practices Committee to investigate "ethical questions raised by such ratings."

In his statement, Mr. Rhodes said: "Most of the members of Congress on the list are not anti-environment but pro-environment."

Anticipating this argument, Mr. Bass said that environmental protection and a strong economy were "in no way incompatible," adding: "Environmental improvements and alternative energy sources automatically generate jobs in the construction, maintenance, engineering and production fields."

Mr. Talcott appeared at an Environmental Action news conference and objected that the organization's choice of issues was biased, though he acknowledged in a colloquy with Mr. Bass, that his votes on other issues probably would not have been approved either.

Environmental Action said that none of the "Dirty Dozen" had more than three "correct" votes on the 14 selected issues, and that Mr. Johnson and Mr. Clancy had only one "correct" vote. "These men have ridden rough shod over the nation's environmental interests far too long," Mr. Bass said. "It's time for the people to clean up America by cleaning up Congress."

G.O.P. IN NEW YORK LIMITS CONTESTS

Few Races Are to Be Held for Delegates' Seats

By THOMAS P. RONAN
New York backers of Ronald Reagan for the Republican nomination for President have entered only four slates totaling 12 candidates for delegates to the party's national convention in the April 6 primary, but he also has some support among delegates already designated.

The extent of this support is difficult to determine as virtually all of the delegates, in keeping with the wishes of the state organization, have labeled themselves uncommitted.

Republican politicians queried in the last few days predicted that the amount of support for Mr. Reagan that eventually developed in the 154-member delegation would depend on whether he proved a viable candidate in primaries still to come.

Prospects in Brooklyn
President Ford and Mr. Reagan have bypassed the New York primary because of the state organization's strong stand against a primary contest. Neither has mounted any discernible effort to win New York delegates.

An indication of the support Mr. Reagan may garner came yesterday when two of the three delegates from Brooklyn's 16th Congressional District, the Flatbush-Park Slope Crown Heights area, said they would vote for Mr. Reagan. Both Donald Pemberton and Robert S. Carroll, who are district lead-

Mrs. Carter Carries Campaign to Harlem

Roslyn Carter took to the streets of Harlem yesterday, campaigning for her husband, Jimmy Carter, who is seeking the Democratic Presidential nomination.

The wife of the former Georgia Governor shook hands in clothing stores, restaurants and small shops along 125th Street, and paid visits to children in the Grant day care center and elderly citizens at the Manhattanville Community Center.

Saying that she was a mother of four and a grandmother of one, she voiced concern about the lack of day-care facilities.

During a luncheon for the elderly Mrs. Carter told the group of about 80 black men and women that "something should be done about Social Security and so many other things to help the elderly."

The slates backing Mr. Reagan but running without his authorization are opposing uncommitted organization slates in the Seventh and Ninth Congressional Districts in Queens, the Bronx-Westchester 23d District and the 25th District, which covers parts of Westchester, Putnam, Dutchess, Ulster and Columbia counties.

There are a few other contests by individual aspirants, apparently unrelated to the Ford-Reagan struggle, in upstate counties. Except for the contests, the 117 delegates from the Congressional districts, three from each, were elected without opposition and will not even appear in the April 6 primary.

Thirty-seven at-large delegates, including the state's top Republicans, were chosen by the state committee in January, with few if any exceptions they are pro-Ford.

The people want checking accounts at Savings Banks. And they want them now.

WASHINGTON, March 25
(UPI)—Mental retardation with physical causes can be cut in half by the year 2000, but up to five million persons are mentally disturbed because of their own poverty and will be harder to treat, a Presidential commission said today.
The President's Committee on Mental Retardation reported that 95 percent of the nation's estimated five million retarded were only slightly impaired because of socio-economic reasons, and that it was "more complex and more difficult to evaluate" such cases than biomedical retardation.
In a 156-page report entitled "Mental Retardation: Century of Decision," the committee said there were 300,000 severely retarded persons in the United States, but that could be cut in half by the end of the century through better prenatal care and planned parenthood.
"If, by the year 2000, prevention could cut the number of such persons in half, the annual savings would be $2.7 billion," the report said.
The committee said it would be more difficult to handle retardation with socio-economic causes.
Because the milder forms of retardation are "related to the environment of poverty and deprivation," the committee said, "serious efforts to reduce the occurrence... must attack the root causes in depressed

Jupiter's Magnetic Tail Found to Be Huge

By JOHN NOBLE WILFORD

The planet Jupiter has an enormous magnetic tail, almost half a billion miles long and perhaps longer, that spans the distance between the orbits of Jupiter and Saturn, according to data returned in recent days from the Pioneer 10 spacecraft. Magnetic tails are long invisible envelopes produced by a planet's magnetic field. They surround a planet and are stretched out to great distances by the force of the solar wind, a supersonic stream of charged particles blowing constantly out from the sun.

Each has a magnetic tail that reaches at least four mil- lion miles down solar wind, as measured by several previous spacecraft. It was known that Jupiter should have a much more extensive tail, since it is a much larger planet with a more powerful magnetic field, but scientists were not sure that Jupiter's tail would reach out far enough to flick across Saturn's orbital path.

Data From Pioneer 10

The discovery was reported yesterday by the Ames Research Center at Mountain View, Calif. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration center directs Pioneer 10, an automated spacecraft that conducted the first close-up observations of Jupiter during a fly-by of the sun's largest planet in December 1973. Dr. John H. Wolfe, the project scientist, said in a telephone interview that Pioneer 10 sensors had shown that the spacecraft passed through Jupiter's tail for at least 24 hours last Friday night and Saturday. During that time, Dr. Wolfe said, the spacecraft's solar-wind detector registered zero because the tail's magnetic envelope completely shut out the solar wind. Calculations showed that Pioneer 10 was in the proper position to intercept the tail, if it should extend that far out. It was the first time since the craft's fly-by of Jupiter that the spacecraft could have detected the tail.

the tail must be expanding at least to that degree as it stretches outward. This would give it a conical shape.

Although Saturn was at the other side of the solar system when Pioneer 10 crossed its orbit last month, the discovery means that Saturn should enter Jupiter's magnetic tail once every 20 years—the next time being in April 1981.

When that occurs, the Ames scientist said, it should produce some interesting magnetic phenomena, particularly disturbances in Saturn's outer radiation belt. Some American spacecraft are expected to tune their radio antennas on Saturn to listen for any evidence of the event.

Pioneer 10 is on its way out of the solar system. Radio contact with the spacecraft expected to continue until it crosses the orbit of Uran in 1979.

A companion spacecraft Pioneer 11, which flew by Jupiter in 1974, is coasting toward a rendezvous with Saturn in September 1979. It is expected to return the first close-up images and data from the ringed planet.

Study Disputes Data on Girls' Puberty

By LAWRENCE K. ALTMAN

Middle-class American girls are no longer reaching sexual maturity at a younger and younger age, according to a 10-year study of 781 girls in a Boston suburb. The findings contradict prevailing concepts about the growth and sexual development of women. The study, described as the largest of its kind, was financed by the National Institutes of Health and was done at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and the Massachusetts General Hospital. Three researchers found that: The average age at which girls first menstruate — 12.8 years — has not changed over the last 30 years. Previous studies indicated that each decade over the last century, girls experienced their first menstrual period about four months earlier than did girls in the preceding decade. No significant difference in age existed in this first menstrual period, or menarche (pronounced "ma-NAR-kee"), between girls in the study and those from these values. Because of a prevailing belief that there is a critical weight, age or height factor associated with menarche, parents often call doctors to express anxiety about their daughter's delayed puberty and to request therapy. "That's dreadful—there's no need for it," Dr. Zacharias said. Dr. Zacharias, Dr. William M. Rand, a biostatistician at M.I.T., and Dr. Richard M. Wurtman, an endocrinologist at the Massachusetts General Hospital, began the study in 1965 because, Dr. Zacharias said, "there was very little good data about the growth and sexual development of normal girls."

and a member of the M.I.T. department of nutrition and food science, emphasized that the most important findings in the study were the "enormous variability" in the age, weight and height of a girl at the time of menarche.

The girls' age at menarche ranged from 9.1 to 17.7 years, their weight from 69 to 180 pounds and their height from 4 feet 6 inches to 5 feet 10 inches. "Within reasonable limits, there is no 'normal' age, weight or height at which girls begin to menstruate," Dr. Zacharias said. She added, "Let's stop talking about what's normal, because there is no such average. To regard averages as representing the 'norm' might give rise to needless concern to those who differ in age or size from these values." "Because of a prevailing belief that there is a critical weight, age or height factor associated with menarche, parents often call doctors to express anxiety about their daughter's delayed puberty and to request therapy. "That's dreadful—there's no need for it," Dr. Zacharias said. Dr. Zacharias, Dr. William M. Rand, a biostatistician at M.I.T., and Dr. Richard M. Wurtman, an endocrinologist at the Massachusetts General Hospital, began the study in 1965 because, Dr. Zacharias said, "there was very little good data about the growth and sexual development of normal girls." with stoutness; late menarche with thinness," the researcher reported.

Though the girls' birth date were evenly distributed throughout the four seasons, fewer girls reached menarche in the spring, when the days are longer, than during other times of the year. These results, the doctor said, are compatible with a permissiveness on mammals which the amount of light received through the eye affects sexual maturation. In human menarche occurs earlier among girls blinded from birth. The new study supports the theory that the amount of light seen through the eye tends to suppress sexual development in humans.

Similarity Is Noted

"There is a striking similarity between our present-day growth data and those obtained 20 to 30 years ago," the researchers reported in the April issue of Obstetrical and Gynecological Survey, a medical journal that The Williams and Wilkins Company publishes in Baltimore. Dr. Leona Zacharias, the senior author of the report, said in a telephone interview that the results showed that "nutrition and public health measures have been reasonably good for a long time" but that the results do not rule out that nutrition and disease played an important role in differences between present data and those of past generations.

F.B.I. REPORTS CRIME ROSE 9% LAST YEAR

WASHINGTON, March 25 (UPI)—The Federal Bureau of Investigation reported today a 9 percent increase in the nation's crime rate for 1975 compared with the record 1 percent leap recorded the previous year. Although the rate of increase slackened by half, the report showed that the crime rate was rising faster in the suburbs, towns, and rural areas than it was in the big cities. "While the percent increase in reported serious crime in the nation was only half as great (in 1975), the levels of crime remained much too high," Attorney General Edward H. Levi said in a statement accompanying the crime report. Among the major categories of crime, only the murder rate decreased nationwide—by 1 percent, the F.B.I. said. Among population groups the 1975 murder rate dropped 2 percent in all cities over 250,000 population, 7 percent in cities of 100,000 to 250,000 population, 5 percent in cities between 50,000 and one million, and 1 percent in cities over one million. But the murder rate increased by 1 percent in suburbs, 3 percent in cities of less than 10,000 population and 5 percent in rural areas.

Kennedy Center Head Acts on La Scala Unit

ROME, March 25—Martin Feinstein, the head of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts of Washington, said here today that he had made a "specific proposal" to the Italian Minister of Tourism and Entertainment...

The Italian Government announced last Sunday that it was forced to cancel the planned trip of La Scala to Washington because rising costs and the recent difficulties of the lira had made it impossible to meet the expenses involved.

Mr. Feinstein declined to say what his proposal was. He met with Adolfo Sarti, the Tourism and Entertainment Minister, and was accompanied by the United States Ambassador, John S. Volpe.

Music: Milton Babbitt

Retrospective Ranges From '30's Songs to Serial Works and a '76 Piece

By ALLEN HUGHES

Milton Babbitt, a man whose prestige and power in the music world are considerable, will be 60 years old May 10, and on Wednesday night the Performers' Committee for 20th-Century Music presented a retrospective concert of his compositions at Columbia University's McMillin Theater.

The program ranged from 1930's songs in the Broadway manner to a stern vocal work written this year, by way of the Composition for 12 Instruments (1948; revised, 1954), the Composition for Viola and Piano (1950), Three Compositions for Piano (1947), "Vision and Prayer" for soprano and synthesized accompaniment (1961), the String Quartet No. 4 (1970) and other items.

This mixed-up list, continuing works of intense expressivity ("Vision and Prayer" for example) alongside others of incredible drabness (String Quartet No. 4 will do as an example), raised again the question that has hovered over the Babbitt career for years: is he an example of a highly gifted individual whose natural instinct for creativity has been blighted by his environment?

Mr. Babbitt was only 22 years old when, in 1938, he joined the Princeton University music faculty. Today, 38 years later, he is still there. Thus, he has spent all of his working life in an atmosphere that encourages theorizing and systematizing.

A man of uncommon intellect and industry, he has extended the application of the serial system of composition beyond the boundaries Schoenberg envisioned for it and has been instrumental in adapting electronic sound to musical use.

But here and there in this concert, as, indeed, in other presentations of his works, one heard the faint cry of an exuberant musical spirit breaking through the confines of this or that compositional tyranny. It was impossible not to wonder what Milton Babbitt the composer would have been if his career had been tied to, say, theater rather than a university.

As Bethany Beardslee demonstrated vividly with her incandescent performance of "Vision and Prayer" (the poem by Dylan Thomas), Mr. Babbitt has a rich vein of theatricality. There is a brooding lyricism there, too, as John Graham found in the viola work, and a feeling for playfulness as well, as revealed in the 1947 piano pieces.

If these and other human qualities had surfaced more freely in Mr. Babbitt's compositions over the years, his status as composer would be more imposing.

They soared from the skies to stage the most daring rescue ever filmed!

THE WORLD'S GREATEST STAGE AND SCREEN SHOW

RADIO CITY MUSIC HALL

The Great Easter Show

Y COCKS, Time Magazine:

"Sean Connery and Audrey Hepburn are superb together."

Robin and Marian' is a film that must stand or fall on the strength of its stars. Fortunately, it has two of the best. Sean Connery is a genuine masculine presence, not afraid to be tender. The moment Audrey Hepburn appears on the screen is startling...how long it has been since an actress has so beguiled us and captured our imagination. Hepburn is unique, now, almost alone."

Robin and Marian

VINCENT CANBY, New York Times:

The strength of 'Robin and Marian' is in its story about two former lovers who discover—in themselves and in each other—something new, more valuable than what had existed before...it has the wit, strength and sheer presences of Sean Connery and Audrey Hepburn in the title roles."

PAULINE KAEI, The New Yorker:

Sean Connery—big, fleshy, graying—is the most natural-looking of heroic figures. He seems unrestrained, naked; a true hero. And a perfect companion to Audrey Hepburn. He's animal-man at its best; she's an innocent yet passionate sprite...The two of them are so wittily matched, and their dark-brown eyes are so full of life, that they achieve an elemental splendor."

REX REED, New York Daily News:

'Robin and Marian' is a grand and enthralling romantic saga in which everything jells gloriously and artistically...it represents the best work of Sean Connery, Richard Lester and James Goldman...it's what we grew up loving about movies and Audrey Hepburn is one of the reasons we keep going and loving them. Few stars have ever achieved the kind of supersonic international stardom she has. She's still the kind of star marquee light up for."

FRANK RICH, New York Post:

'Robin and Marian' is the kind of return to glory worth writing ballads about. Sean Connery and Audrey Hepburn epitomize ideals of glamour and sophistication that have since passed out of our lives. This movie reminds us that legends never die—that they are, instead, perpetually reborn."

DITH CRIST, Saturday Review:

'Robin and Marian' is a worldly, wise, and witty response to our eternal wonderment of how our heroes lived ever after, thanks to two masters of the genre—screenwriter James Goldman and director Richard Lester. Robert Shaw's Sheriff is a lion in autumn—slow patience."

Mr. Perle's "Sonnets to Orpheus," settings of four Rilke poems for chorus and a supporting wind ensemble...

Not so immediately appealing because of the rather crabbed instrumental style was Mr. Weisgall's "End of Summer," a setting of three poems for tenor, oboe, violin, viola and cello...

Kraft's "Diaphonies," in its first performance, played oboe and piano against each other. The interaction was by turns dramatic, lyrical and playful...

"Adults who want to see a well made film with a BRILLIANT performance by Robert DeNiro will hail 'TAXI DRIVER'."

"Taxi Driver" is a disturbing, frightening film, but it has the desperate excitement that goes with his vision of the city. The cast is a juicy one but first and last "Taxi Driver" belongs to Robert DeNiro, the most REMARKABLE young actor of the American screen."

"Robert DeNiro is brilliant... a DEVASTATING performance. The twist ending should leave audiences gasping."

"FEROCIOUSLY VOLATILE! No other film has ever dramatized urban indifference so powerfully."

"Robert DeNiro's performance is REMARKABLE, an achievement that brings out a personal 10. However you get there, be sure to get to see 'Taxi Driver.'"

"It is not an experience you'll soon forget, for it is more than disconcerting—it is SHOCKING."

"Robert DeNiro... riveting, FASCINATING acting of this sort is rare in films."

"'Taxi Driver' is a SMASHING movie."

"A JOLTING film to remember."

"Robert DeNiro. A STUNNING veracious performance."

'Acrobatics,' Story of 2 Women, at Interart

ACROBATICS by Joyce Aaron and Luna Tario. Directed by Elias Aaro...

By MEL GUSSOW

In "Acrobatics," two old friends, both having recently ended affairs with men, meet after a long absence...

The meeting takes place in Miss Aaron's hotel room, an island on which she has isolated herself from life outside...

The two women talk at, instead of to each other. For some time it is as if two separate monologues are going on...

The drama, written by Miss Aaron (an actress formerly with the Open Theater) and Luna Tario (a Canadian novelist) and directed by Miss Aaron at the Interart Theater...

The two never seems to touch — emotionally or physically. The only intimacy comes in a dream (projected on the wall above a bed) in which Miss Aaron is seen in the act of love with a man...

"Acrobatics" ends with Miss Aaron saying, "What say we go to a restaurant and... think the whole thing over?"

proceeds from the gate from the 15,000-seat arena plus $2 million from worldwide television income. Japanese businessmen associated with the production estimated ringside seats in Tokyo could sell for between $300 and $350.

Before meeting the 34-year old Inoki, Ali is scheduled to defend his title against Jimmy Young April 30 in Landover, Md., and Richard Dunn of England on May 24 in Munich—provided that Dunn wins the European title on April 6 from Arndt August of Germany.

The 8-foot-3-inch, 245-pound Inoki remained unperturbed throughout Ali's patented "trade" yesterday. Like Ali's last opponent, Jean-Pierre Coopman, Inoki speaks no English.

"I have been watching his chin, and from what I see I won't have no trouble," said Ali. Inoki will fight barefisted, while Ali has voiced a preference for 4-ounce gloves.

"The smallest in boxing is six," said Ali to Inoki. "When I land, I want you to feel those knuckles."

Then the champion turned to his audience. "What's that kind of bird with the big chin you see flying around?"

"Pelican!" someone shouted. Ali grinned.

"I'm gonna label you as the Pelican. George Foreman was the Mummy, Joe Frazier was the Gorilla, Liston was the Bear. You shall be known as the Pelican."

Clad in sandals, a long skirt called a "hakama" and a black silk "haori," or jacket, Inoki's reply through an interpreter was as formal as his attire.

"I am happy to talk with the great Ali," he said, "although the contents are sometimes ridiculous. When your fist lands on my chin, take care that your fist is not damaged."

In his repertory of professional wrestling moves Inoki includes the backdrop, in which he flings an opponent over his shoulder and drops him flat on the canvas, the flying droppick and the cobra twist. "I just want the right to hit when I'm down," said Ali.

When a man asked Ali if he didn't think this exhibition was demeaning to the world's heavyweight champion, Ali became vociferous but eventually grew candid.

"I'm so far in my own class that I have to look for other things," he said. "This is what I'm involved in—publicity, controversy, actin just to accumulate, draw crowds."

"Why am I me?—Because I do things that are ridiculous. Why is Evel Knievel what he is? Because he does things that are ridiculous. Man desires to be mystified."

"What's going to happen if Ali gets his arm twisted? What will happen if he throws Ali on his back? What will happen if he kicks Ali? Man wants to understand what he cannot understand."

Shaw Defeats Naber

By FRANK LITSKY
Special to The New York Times

PROVIDENCE, R. I., March 25—Tim Shaw and John Naber, two titans of American swimming, met head-on tonight in the first final of the 53d annual National Collegiate championships. Shaw won in record time, but both were happy.

Shaw is an 18-year-old freshman at his home-town college, Long Beach State in California. Last year, he won three world championships, broke three world records and won the Sullivan Award as America's outstanding amateur athlete.

Naber, from Menlo Park, Calif., is a 20-year-old junior at Southern California. He won three titles in this meet in 1974 and three in 1975, and, although he is primarily a backstroke, he has won his victories included the 500-yard freestyle.

They swam in adjoining lanes in the 500-yard freestyle final, and Naber nursed a two-foot lead for 250 yards. Then Shaw, a fierce competitor, spurred, edged ahead and stayed there, winning by two feet. His time of 4 minutes 19.053 seconds and Naber's time of 4:19.715 broke Naber's year-old American record of 4:20.450.

Naber Applauds Shaw

Seconds after they finished, still in the water, Naber hugged Shaw and raised the winner's arm in triumph. On the victory stand, the ebullient Naber led the applause for his conqueror and turned Shaw's head toward a television camera.

Later, Shaw said, "It didn't enter my mind if I could win. I wanted a good effort, and I wanted to make sure I swam hard. Winning this race is a confidence builder."

The time was good, and Naber was happy.

"I couldn't have swum any better," he said after the race. "So I'm happy with my swim. It's a loss. That's what sports is all about. It's no disgrace to lose to Tim Shaw."

Many coaches were surprised that Naber lost, and many were surprised that the record was broken because of the relatively shallow pool. The three-day meet is being held in Brown University's newly dedicated Smith Swimming Center, where the 25-yard course is 4 1/2 to 6 1/2 feet deep. Shallow pools mean more water turbulence.

Shallow pool or not, the times were generally fast.

Southern California's defending team champions won the 50-yard freestyle with Joe Bottom, the defender, in 20.081 seconds and the 400-yard medley relay, with Naber leading off and Bottom

Seaver Hurls 4 Innings As Mets Lose to Cards

By JOSEPH DURSO
Special to The New York Times

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla., March 25—Unsigned but untraded, Tom Seaver made his first appearance of baseball's late spring today and pitched four unfruitful innings while the New York Mets were losing to the St. Louis Cardinals, 1-0.

It was the second straight defeat for the Mets after 17 days of closed training camps and six days of hurry-up exercising. They have scored only one run in 18 innings against the Yankees and Cardinals with Joe Frazier making his debut as manager and the regular season rushing upon everybody, only two weeks away.

A lot of sunshine and an air of unreality surrounded the teams as they staged their traditional "home opener" in St. Petersburg, where big league teams have been training for 50 years. The players on the field were making economic history with their representatives in a negotiating room back in New York, where the sports legal structure was still being hammered out. Al Lang Field, where exhibition games have been played for a generation, was being demolished and rebuilt, somewhat like the "reserve clause." And Seaver was pitching for the Mets during a lull in his contract war with the Mets.

Not only that, but the teams were meeting on a city park refurbished at a cost of $100,000 while Al Lang Field was being modernized at a cost of $2.8 million. The complex is known as Campbell Park, and the diamond in it was renamed Oliver Field today in memory of James Oliver, a baseball pioneer in the neighborhood and the father of Nate Oliver, a one-time infielder for the Los Angeles Dodgers.

To the public, it proved a pleasant little park with short prices: $1 for the bleachers, $2 grandstand and $2.50 for the box seats. To the players, it proved a pleasant little park with short fences: 293 feet to left field, 362 to center and 334 to right, and six home runs were hit here yesterday when the Cardinals played a sneak-peek against the Detroit Tigers.

But in the midst of all that change, there stood Seaver, pitching four innings of two-hit, three-strikeout ball, a constant in a changing world. At least, a constant until he becomes a free agent or the Mets trade him. But today, Seaver was still the stabilizer of the team despite all the winds of revolution.

"Maybe they're showcasing me for the scouts from the visiting teams," he quipped before the opening ceremonies. Then he considered the late date and the fact that the Mets had been forced to cancel 10 games because of the long legal dispute and said: "I'll only pitch three times this spring instead of six."

Reggie Smith of the St. Louis Cardinals slides safely into second while Mike Phillips of the Mets waits for the throw. Exhibition game was played in St. Petersburg, Fla.

an ideal scoring day. A gentle rain fell for about an hour this morning, softening the greens enough to hold the approach shots, and there was none of the usual wind whistling through the woods of pine, oak and palm.

Don January, who is as skinny as Murphy is round, trailed by one stroke. The veteran professional, who played so badly here last year—on one shanked drive he barely passed the ladies' tee—that he had to say, "Thank God we ran out of holes."

Hubert Green, fresh from consecutive victories at Miami and Jacksonville, maintained his subpar pace to lead a posse tied at 68.

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla., March 25—Lite with the marines in Vietnam, Ed Figueroa has found in the last year, was safer than life in American baseball parks.

"When I was drafted in Puerto Rico, they told me I was going to the marines and I said, 'What?' Figueroa related today after pitching for the first time as a Yankee. "My brother was in the marines and he told me about it. I was for two months in Vietnam [1969]. I was in infantry, and I was for three weeks in action, but thanks to God nothing happened to me."

Red Smith Welcome, Sweet Springtime

Special to The New York Times

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla., March 25—Spring training was late but the fans came early and kept coming, creeping west a few car lengths at a time in a swollen stream of traffic three lanes wide. At 8 o'clock last night when the Yankees and Mets joined in the rites of March, Fort Lauderdale Stadium bulged with the next-to-largest crowd this 14-year-old park has ever held, and cars were still backed up at least a mile on Commercial Boulevard. With 7,256 cash customers in the stands, gates were closed and it was estimated that at least 2,000 others were turned away. Twenty-five miles down Interstate 95, another 9,347 clients were already watching the Baltimore Orioles and Cincinnati Reds in the year's first exhibition in Miami Stadium. In 17 years there, the Orioles had never drawn so many during the week, although Baltimore and New York played to 2,484 one Sunday in 1965 when the Yankees last performed as defending champions of the American League. Obviously, the baseball public was less reluctant to see spring training start than the club owners, who locked the players out of camp until last week.

Temperatures were dropping and an easterly wind was kicking up to 25 knots while the teams took batting practice. Joe Frazier, seventh manager of the 14-year-old Mets, shook his head dubiously.

"Playing the opening game at night," he said, "Tough on everybody." He knew from experience that both teams would be lucky to get by without disabling muscle pulls. Yet he also knows from 10 years of experience as a manager in the minors that no team needs six weeks to get ready for a championship season.

Sharper Than A Serpent's Tooth

"I've been getting clubs in condition for years," he said, "and we never had more than three to four weeks. These fellows are throwing and running surprisingly well. Only the hitters might still be behind in their timing." During the lockout, many players trained at their own expense, including some of the Mets' pitchers. "Getting arms ready to pitch nine innings might take a little longer," Frazier said, "but how often do you see anybody go nine these days, even in August?"

He was watching Bud Harrelson at infield practice. A demountable knee, repaired by surgery in May, kept the world's most battered shortstop out of all but 34 games last season. "He's moving good," the manager said. "That's important."

Standing near the home team's dugout with microphone drawn, Phil Rizzuto was interviewing the Yankees' clean-shaven manager, Billy Martin. Twenty years ago when the Yankees ruled baseball, nothing came between these two except second base. Each was aware of the other's idiosyncrasies, like Rizzuto's horror of creepies and crawlies and things that go bump in the night, so now with a casual gesture, of comradeship Martin-draped the stuffed

8:45 Lightning

Willie Randolph can run, too, if he can make it as the second baseman. He is one of two gentlemen of distinction in sports who are native to Holly Hill, S. C. The other is Edward Sweat, the groom who took care of Riva Ridge and Secretariat when they were racing. Randolph, who now calls Brooklyn home, came to the Yankees from Pittsburgh in a trade for Doc Medich. In an intrasquad game Tuesday he had a single and triple, and now he hit a sharp line drive for a single on his first appearance against Koosman.

To be sure, that was in the second inning when six Yankees singled off Koosman, five in a row, with nobody out. The first five scored, and the Yankees were off to a 7-1 victory. Away back when baseball was an afternoon game, the Yankees of Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig et al had a habit of breaking up the furniture along around the seventh inning. "Five o'clock lightning," somebody called it.

Now Thurman Munson singled, Lou Piniella singled, Graig Nettles singled, Rick Dempsey singled, Willie Randolph singled, Ed Brinkman singled. "Wow!" a man said, "8:45 lightning!"

They had help. Nettles's hit took a hop that barely cleared the upstretched mitt of Ed Kranepool, at first base. Dave Kingman came in from right field and overran the ball, Jack Heldmann, playing second base, reached for it and kicked it away. It looked rehearsed.

Rivers singled to center for the sixth hit of the inning, wheeled around first base and fled down to second on Del Unser's throw to third. The throw got past Wayne Garrett and Rivers swept on to third base.

Joe Frazier, of course, was looking on. He wasn't around New York when the Mets played that way almost every day, so it probably didn't remind him of anything.

When the match was completed, with a 10-8 tiebreaker during which Stockton failed to convert a match point at 6-3, Stockton hit a ball in the air over the adjacent clubhouse and went to the net for a handshake. Nastase, however, had walked to the sidelines. Nastase eventually approached Stockton, who ignored him, and later both players went into the locker room where arguments resumed. Cliff Richey, who had lost earlier in the day to Ashe, 6-3, 6-4, told Nastase, "You're a disgrace to the game."

The problem was a shot—on both the drive and the approach—that pulled so far left that Murphy had to compensate by aiming exaggeratedly to the right. "And once in a while when I hit where I aimed, Murphy shot dead, I leave myself with a putt of 35, 40 feet from the wrong direction."

Everybody started punching, Figueroa said, and I got hit in the side. Then there was the Frank Tanana-Willie Horton match in a game with Detroit. Horton started for Tanana after a close pitch and again, both teams erupted into a brawl. "I was in the clubhouse," Figueroa related, "and when I came out, Horton saw me and he said, 'I want you.' When we play the first time in California I threw a fast ball inside and he went to Elie again. We play together for two years. We were roommates a couple times. That no way to treat a roommate."

$150,000 IS VOTED FOR HOUSE INQUIRY

Unit Looking Into Disclosure of Spy Report to Begin Quizzing Witnesses

By RICHARD D. LYONS
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, March 25—The House's investigation into the disclosure of the report of its disbanded intelligence committee will begin quizzing witnesses next week after five weeks of delays caused by wrangling over money.

Today, the House Administration Committee raised to $150,000 the special request for funds to carry out the investigation, thus partly reversing an earlier cut. Representative John J. Flory, the Georgia Democrat who is chairman of the House Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, which was directed by the House to undertake the inquiry, had originally sought $350,000 for the investigation.

Approval Expected
The formal resolution requesting the funds will be voted on by the House on Monday. It was viewed as almost certain that the request would be approved, since the House had directed the investigation by a vote of 269 to 115.

Quick Career Moves
Mr. Callaway was born here about 120 miles south of Atlanta, into one of the state's most prominent families. Local legend has it that when he decided he wanted a military career, a quick call from his father to a Congressman immediately secured his enrollment at West Point.

On another matter, the Administration Committee voted unanimously in executive session today to direct its Accounts Subcommittee to find a method by which representatives would not be able to bill the House for official trips that were not taken.

Defeat by Maddox
In 1966, Mr. Callaway, sensing a renaissance for the Republican Party in the South, gave up his seat in Congress and came back to Georgia to run for Governor. It was one of the rare reversals of his life.

S.I.C. Says City's Prosecutors Improperly Disclose Information

By THOMAS A. JOHNSON

The State Investigation Commission blamed prosecutors' offices in New York City yesterday for "a substantial percentage" of improper disclosures of information on grand jury investigations.

The Suggestions
Among Mr. Brown's suggestions for stopping disclosures from grand jury investigations were recommendations that evidence of improper disclosures be turned over to prosecutors so that indictments can be made against individuals, that the appropriate state officials take disciplinary action against public employees where this is feasible and that prosecutors investigate the improper disclosures coming out of their own offices.

Other Proposals
Among the several recommendations for enlarging the list of persons who would be prohibited from disclosing information and clarifying the present law to prohibit the improper disclosure of any investigation conducted by a prosecutor except under certain limited circumstances.

They haven't changed their minds much at all. To many of them, he is still the spoiled prince of an enormously wealthy family who almost always got exactly what he wanted.

Beame Proposes Budget Cuts Ending 8,000 More City Jobs

The austerity task of restoring balance to the city budget currently involves $1 billion in cuts over three years, beginning with $200 million previously announced for this year.

The details provided by the Mayor portrayed a city further constricted by such means as the loss of more than 2,500 police and welfare jobs, virtually all through attrition; the elimination of the Addiction Services Agency; the cutting in half of the Air Resources Department; and further reductions in garbage collections, rush-hour ferry service, library support, consumer services and museum security funds.

While some critics have called for full-scale deflation, Mayor Beame rejected this as a viable alternative. "The city and its people are motivated not by a death wish, but by a passion for life," he said.

At the same time, Mr. Beame urged that the City University not be merged into the state system, and he called on the Governor to help appoint a "blue-ribbon panel" of experts to recommend new financing, governance and access standards.

the state and the Financial Control Board, clearly contained both a fiscal and a political strategy. Of the $821 million in coming cuts, $365 million involves initiatives into the state and Federal realms. These include the $267 million in projected city university and court savings, plus $35 million in hoped-for Federal housing subsidies, and a controversial total of $43 million in projected savings from withdrawing city workers from the Social Security system.

The Mayor has said he is only studying the Social Security withdrawal, but the new plan includes a projected savings, nevertheless, on the assumption that he will take the steps two years from now.

"The city and its people are motivated not by a death wish, but by a passion for life," he said. "If, as the Governor said, the 'days of wine and roses' are over, then we must make it very clear that the city of New York will no longer pick up anybody else's tab unless the law says so. And if the law says so, we will fight like the devil to get it changed so that we can win fiscal justice for this city, its people, and its businesses."

Budget officials said the proposed cuts reflected more of a qualitative judgment rather than an across-the-board approach. Among the larger cuts in the coming budget were a total of $45 million in the Health and Hospitals Corporation, including $27 million in city funds; $57 million in higher education, including the first $30 million step in the city's plan to withdraw support of the City University; $30.9 million in city funds cut from education; a $28 million cut in social services, including $11 million in city funds. The uniformed-service cuts include $39 million for the police, and less than $9 million each in the Fire and Sanitation Departments.

Hornell's Hopes Ride on Chessie Purchasing the Erie, but Outlook Is Bleak

By REGINALD STUART

The New York Times/Sen Horowitz
Railroad employees leaving their trains in Hornell, N.Y., where a rail reorganization may force many of the 1,000 workers to relocate. The railroad is the largest single employer in the upstate town of 12,000 people.

HORNELL, N. Y., March 25—Railroad tracks cutting through the center of town, and the long trains that frequently use them, may annoy people in some places. But in this remote southwestern New York community, the sight and sound of trains creeping through at all hours of the day and night have been comforting for decades... With its population of about 12,000, Hornell has been a railroad town since 1850, when the New York & Erie Railroad Company, now the Erie Lackawanna Railway, rolled a locomotive into town.

Hornell Chamber of Commerce. "It would certainly be a slap and a rap in the teeth for this town."

The only hope for averting this drastic move is a possible purchase of the Erie by the Chessie System, one of the nation's most profitable railroad companies. The Government has given union leaders and Chessie officials until Sunday to agree on work rules should the workers become part of the Chessie system. But positions on both sides are rigid, and prospects for agreement appear bleak.

Financial Loss Is Forecast
A Conrail takeover would pull out of this community most of the $12 million to $15 million the Erie pumps in annually in wages. People like Adam Davidson, owner of Davidson's Furniture, are already worried.

"The impact of not knowing what is going to happen has certainly been felt by anybody selling big-ticket items," said Mr. Davidson. A customer who had just finished waiting on said she would wait until April 1, the date Conrail is scheduled to take over the Erie, before deciding to buy the living room furniture that interested her.

Davidson's Furniture is one of a number of businesses that have shifted locations or undertaken a major face-lifting in recent years as part of an effort by the city's Mayor, Andrew R. Mazzella, to improve the quality of life in the city. Heavy infusions of Federal money for urban renewal have been obtained, a diver-

The Major Events of the Day

International
The United States last night vetoed a resolution in the Security Council of the United Nations deploring Israeli policies in Jerusalem and the occupied areas on the West Bank of the Jordan River. William W. Scranton, the new United States representative at the United Nations, said the resolution was "unbalanced." The 14-1 vote ended a debate that began Monday on anti-Israeli unrest in Jerusalem and West Bank towns. [Page 1, Column 4.]
The six-man contest to succeed Harold Wilson as Britain's Prime Minister turned unexpectedly and dramatically into a struggle involving only three—Michael Foot, James Callaghan and Denis Healey. The first round of balloting among Labor members of the House of Commons produced no candidate with the required majority. [1:2-3.]
The Ford Administration announced that contingency plans for possible moves against Cuba were being reviewed, but it seemed clear from the comments of several officials that there was no urgency about the review, which reportedly began several weeks ago. Several Administration officials said they believed that the recent warnings by President Ford and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger were related to Presidential primary politics. [1:1.]
South Africa announced that it would withdraw all its forces from southern Angola by Saturday, Defense Minister Pieter W. Botha said the withdrawal of 3,000 to 5,000 troops guarding the multimillion-dollar Cuanene River hydroelectric and irrigation project was being done after Angolan guarantees to protect South Africa's border interests. The announcement was made on the eve of a debate in the United Nations in which South Africa probably would have been called an "aggressor" in southern Angola. [1:2.]
After his palace in Beirut was shelled by Moslem artillery it was abandoned by President Suleiman Franjieh, who took refuge at the Christian stronghold of Jmieh, 13 miles north of the capital. His forced withdrawal under the Moslem offensive was said to be a harsh blow to the morale of Mr. Franjieh's Christian supporters and allies. Pierre Gemayel, another Christian leader, appealed "to all able-bodied Christian men and women" to join the nearest Christian militia post "so you may save our homeland before it is too late." [1:5-6.]

National
Senator Henry M. Jackson has been moving leftward as he campaigns for the Democratic Presidential nomination. During appearances in New York City recently as a contender in the April 6 primary, he has repeatedly placed his heaviest emphasis on social programs that would provide jobs, save the cities from financial disaster and aid the poor, the elderly and the ill. At a dinner sponsored by the Social Democrats, U.S.A., he remarked, "Isn't it interesting that I'm the only Presidential candidate that's willing to call himself a liberal?" [1:7.]
Researchers appear to be close to identifying a substance that "throws the master switch" in embryonic development, initiating the events that lead to the formation of specialized organs and finally to a fully developed organism. Research so far, notably at Cambridge, England, and the University of Indiana in Bloomington, has concentrated on amphibians, such as frogs and the axolotl, related to salamanders. [1:5-8.]
Metropolitan
Mayor Beame proposed $821 million in further budget reductions based on added service cuts, the end of 8,000 more municipal jobs and the controversial shifting of more than $250 million in education and court costs from the city to the state. He said the only alternative to the state's taking over of $127 million in court, probation and correction costs would be another large number of layoffs, including 1,300 police officers. [1:8.]
Peter A. Reilly, of Canaan, Conn., was granted a new trial by a Superior Court Judge in Litchfield who ruled that his conviction for his mother's murder two and a half years ago was "a grave injustice." Judge John A. Speziale, who presided at the 21-year-old Mr. Reilly's trial in 1974 and sentenced him to a six-to-16-year prison term, also predicted after reviewing what he called "the unusual, bizarre and complicated nature of the facts and circumstances of this case," that Mr. Reilly would never be convicted of the murder again. [1:8-7.]
Matthew Guinan, president of the Transport Workers Union, said that he might be willing to agree to a wage deferral in negotiations with the Transit Authority if his 34,000 members got some money now. Meanwhile, negotiations continued in an effort to head off a transit strike. [6:8-5.]

Veterinary College At Cornell Warned It Faces Probation

ITHACA, N.Y., March 25—The New York State College of Veterinary Medicine at Cornell University may be placed on probation by the American Veterinary Medicine Association because of an insufficient number of faculty members and inadequate facilities. A committee of veterinary medicine professors from colleges across the country recommended the probation after visiting Cornell last month for a routine accreditation inspection. Cornell has long had a reputation as one of the finest of the 19 veterinary colleges in the United States. Edward C. Melby, dean of the veterinary college, said he hoped the college was placed on probation because this would put the state under "extreme pressure" to approve additional funds to correct the deficiencies. Mr. Melby said that if Cornell was placed under probation and the deficiencies were not corrected within a prescribed period it could lose its accreditation from the veterinary association's council on education. The committee's report found:
•A student-faculty ratio of 7.6 to 1, when it should be 4 to 1.
•Small-animal facilities that are "grossly inadequate in size."
•Inadequate isolation facilities for the study of infectious diseases. Mr. Melby said that at least $1.2 million was needed from the state to make up for the inadequacies in the number of professional staff members and that $1.2 million more was needed to upgrade the physical plant.

Josef Albers, Artist and Teacher, Dies

Josef Albers, the artist, who was also world-renowned as a teacher of art and as a color theorist, died early Thursday morning in his sleep at the Yale-New Haven Hospital. He was 88 years old and had been in the hospital for observation of a possible heart ailment.

He attended the Teachers College in Buren and became an instructor in several Westphalian primary schools. But in 1913, he decided to pursue formal art studies and enrolled at the Royal Art School in Berlin, remaining there until 1915. For the next four years he studied at art schools in Essen and in Munich, but gradually his respect for the traditional and representational in art declined.

He began to see his artistic endeavors as more related to his Westphalian family tradition of craftsmen—blacksmiths on his mother's side, carpenters and handymen on his father's. And he was attracted to the Bauhaus, a sort of laboratory-workshop founded in Weimar in 1919 by the architect Walter Gropius, which sought to unify the disciplines of painting, sculpture and architecture and to give the craftsman equal status with the artist.

Enrolling in the Bauhaus in 1920, Mr. Albers studied for three years, then joined the staff as an instructor in basic design, a new course that he developed. Constantly experimenting, he made glass paintings, stained-glass windows from broken bottles, worked in metal and designed furniture, including the first bent laminated-wood chair.

His teaching associates included such luminaries as Paul Klee, Wassily Kandinsky and László Moholy-Nagy, and their group endeavors helped pave the way for the acceptance and understanding of abstract art and to break down barriers between fine and applied art.

In 1928, Mr. Albers married Anni Fleischmann, a Bauhaus student, who later became known for her elegant woven tapestries and fabric designs. In 1933, when the Nazis closed the school, Mr. Albers came to the United States.

He also had published over the last few years a series of print editions with texts, "Formulations—Articulations, Vols. I and II," a massive portfolio, was published by Harry Abrams in 1972, and three portfolios of 12 prints each have been produced since 1974. Tyler Graphics of Bedford Village, N.Y., at his death, the artist was working on a fourth series, "Never Before." A large free-standing wall, depicting Albers images and commissioned by Stanford University, was in the planning stage at the artist's death, according to Kenneth Tyler, director of Tyler Graphics.

Fred Schmertz, Who Directed Millrose Games 41 Years, Dies

He Attracted Many Olympic Stars for the Oldest Indoor Track Meet

BATON ROUGE, La., March 25 (UPI)—Fred Schmertz, director for 41 years of New York's oldest indoor track meet, the Millrose Games, the oldest indoor invitational track meet, died today at the age of 87 after a long illness at the Baton Rouge Medical Center.

He is survived by his wife, Rose, a son, Howard, of Belmont, N.J., who succeeded his father as director of the Millrose Games; a daughter, Justice Herzog of Baton Rouge; five grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren.

A funeral service will be held at noon on Sunday with burial at Mount Hebron Cemetery in Queens.

Director of Olympians By NEIL ANDRUS After Percy Williams, a relatively unknown sprinter from Canada, had raced to two gold medals at the 1933 Olympic Games, Fred Schmertz could hardly wait to greet the new world champion.

"Congratulations," Schmertz said to Williams, "you have just qualified for the Millrose Games."

For more than four decades while serving as a lawyer for John Wanamaker's, Fred Schmertz directed what he considered an indoor version of the Olympic, the Wanamaker Millrose Games at Madison Square Garden. To track and field fans, it often seemed that Millrose meets produced as much drama and controversy as the Olympic Games.

The Millrose Games, a tradition that has been in the city since 1912, was founded by Fred Schmertz and Fred Wilt in the Wanamaker Mile that was not discontinued officially until 10 months after the race.

Schmertz succeeded John G. Anderson, the amateur golfer, as Millrose meet director in 1934 and revealed in the indoor, track-like atmosphere of his indoor promotions. He pointed proudly to the fact that five champions in the 1932 and 1956 Millrose meets went on to win Olympic titles those same years, as if competing in the Millrose was a natural course to follow for a gold medal.

The Millrose met traditional, by opening the indoor track and field season at the Garden in late January.

Schmertz worked at making the meet a success. To encourage top athletes to appear, he sent long handwritten letters to favorite competitors. Such personal interest, in a sport that dwelled almost solely on statistical excellence, seemed to induce many athletes to perform better in the Millrose Games than they would at other stops on the track circuit.

Schmertz pursued and cherished close relationships with officials and athletes, from Olympians to schoolboys. When Steve Smith set a world record in the pole vault with the first 18-foot indoor vault at the 1973 Millrose meet, one of Smith's first gestures, after somersaulting to the crowd, was to climb into the seats and shake hands with Schmertz.

"The Millrose became a model for indoor track meets," said Jesse Abramson, former Herald Tribune sports writer and, more recently, meet director of the United States Olympic invitation meet, who knew Schmertz well. "In Fred's public image, he was almost entirely Mr. Millrose."

In 1938, Schmertz invited an obscure athlete from North Texas State that ran two sets of twins with rhythmic-sounding names—Elmer and Delmer Brown and Blaine and Wayne Riedout.

"The twins set a record during the meet, and Fred loved telling people that he had been ridiculed by everyone before the meet for bringing them here," Stan Saplin, a long-time friend, recalled.

March in Harlem at Hospital Closing

By CHARLAYNE HUNTER

Demonstrators of District Council 37 on Long 125th Street, American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations, State, County and Municipal Employees, told the gathering at the closing of the hospital that if Sydenham closed, Harlem Hospital could not accommodate the patients and that the community was "fighting for its life."

Mr. Samuels threatened to hold up passage of the city budget "unless Sydenham is in it." And Mr. McCall said that the community would not allow the policy of "municipal shrinkage to shrink our community because we started with 49-year-olds, less than anybody in the first place."

The black community, Mr. McCall said, was "picked out to be destroyed" because it was believed to be powerless. Charles STX Kenyatta, street corner orator and activist whose tactics have included sit-ins, occupations and other forms of disruption, drew the greatest response when he called on the crowd to register and vote.

Indifference Condemned

"If you have not walked to the polls and put your name in the ballot box," he shouted, "you are committing as great a sin as those who want to close this hospital."

A hearing on the plan to close the hospital is to be held tomorrow at the Department of Health, 125 Worth Street.

Yesterday's rally was the culmination of two months of effort by Mr. McCall, Mr. Esmer and Miss Lacey, who resigned from the staff of the Health and Hospitals Corporation to work on this project.

Their effort involved not only mailings and contacts with most of Harlem's community organizations and churches, but also cake sales, raffles and flea markets and an upcoming "Hustle for Sydenham" discotheque at Charles Gallery.

In addition, last Sunday, ministers at most of the major churches in Harlem spoke of the effort in their sermons, and Mr. McCall's sermon, "The Healing Church," was carried on radio station WBLB.

"The command of Jesus to 'heal the sick' is a large order," Mr. McCall said in his sermon.

And the Harlem Commonwealth Council paid for a half-page advertisement about the march and rally in The New York Amsterdam News, which has also carried stories and editorials on behalf of saving the hospital.

William Lynch of the National Conference on Public Service Employment, who worked with the coalition, said the effort had gained its momentum and effectiveness as a result of organized leadership.

"In too many cases, we're asking the rank and file to provide the leadership," he said. "The leaders are going to have to determine what form it's going to take. When to negotiate. When to demonstrate. And that's what the people have been waiting for."

Sydenham's Demise Is Result of Age And Deterioration of City's Economy

By DAVID BIRD

Sydenham Hospital, in a more favorable fiscal climate, might have been patched up and saved in order to keep the municipal hospital system intact.

Now its aging building is scheduled to close by June 30 to save the newer, more viable parts of the city's Health and Hospitals Corporation system, which is faced with deep budget cuts.

Sydenham was built in 1925 as a private hospital. The city took it over in 1949, when it went into bankruptcy. Sydenham was kept going because it was then the only place to which black doctors could admit patients.

That reason for its existence has largely disappeared as black doctors have gained admitting privileges elsewhere. About 75 percent of Sydenham's doctors are now affiliated with other institutions as well.

Because of its age it has been difficult to keep Sydenham in compliance with newer hospital codes.

Smaller Rooms Needed

"It is a seriously deficient plant," says Charles Windsor, the Health and Hospitals Corporation senior vice president for operations, who estimates that $5 million to $8 million would have to be put into the building to meet existing state health codes. One of the things that would have to be done would be the dividing up of the cramped six- and 14-bedded public wards into more pleasant one- and two-bedded rooms.

Mr. Windsor says this would reduce Sydenham's bed capacity by at least 25 percent. Even now, with 172 beds, it is not really large enough for economic operation, he says.

Robert H. Christmas, the hospital's executive director says, on the other hand, that the hospital is vital to health care in the area and argues that the city should pay to fix it up.

At the edge of the operating-room suite, Mr. Christmas pointed to the ducts of an old air-conditioning system that no longer works. It would take $250,000 to put in a new one. In the meantime several window air-conditioners, which do not comply with codes, have been installed.

Lack of Alternative Cited

"But sometimes on hot days," Mr. Christmas said, "during operations doctors perspire so much they drip right into the incisions and nurses have been overcome by heat prostration."

Mr. Christmas and supporters who have rallied to Sydenham say there is no other place for its patients to go. They say that the nearest municipal institution, Harlem Hospital, 12 blocks away, is already full.

Those who want to close Sydenham say that while Harlem may be running at capacity now, there are other municipal hospitals, such as the new Lincoln, opening on Sunday, in the South Bronx, that could easily absorb Sydenham's patients.

The loss of jobs also is a key issue in the closing of Sydenham. With 900 employees it is one of the largest employers in Harlem.

State Agency Calls on Hynes to Begin Inquiry Into Boarding Homes for Aged

By IVER PETERSON
Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, March 25 — The Department of Social Services called today for an investigation of the state's 426 private boarding homes for the aged by Charles J. Hynes, the special nursing-home prosecutor.

It cited a lack of control over the public cost of the facilities and possible conflicts of interest between the proprietors of the homes and their suppliers.

The department's recommendation came in a study that was basically a review of the financial operations and practices of the homes. It followed the release of preliminary findings last week by the United States Senate Subcommittee on Long-Term Care for the Aged that alleged inhumane treatment of residents of the homes and the abuse of public funds that supported them.

The homes, known as private proprietary homes for adults, differ from nursing homes in that they do not provide regular medical care for their residents.

"Unregulated Industry"

"What the study shows is a totally unregulated industry," and I think we can share the blame for it, said a spokesman for the Department of Social Services, which provides the state funds for the homes. They are licensed and inspected by the State Board of Social Welfare, which opposes an investigation by Mr. Hynes.

The report found that "reliable and statistical information concerning costs and profitability of adult homes in the state is nonexistent." It added that what information could be obtained from the sample of homes, 83 of the 426, did not provide a basis for recommending any change in the level of Federal, state and local support for patients eligible for special Supplemental Security Income.

Some 15,000 aged, blind or disabled residents of homes receive $386.70 from public sources under the supplemental income system per month toward their care. The Federal Government pays $157.70, with the state and the community splitting the other $229.

Study Cites Links

The $79 million in state revenue annually in public funds annually. The report found that 61 of the homes for which leasing information was available showed "some relationship between the proprietor of the home and the leasing corporation." There were also indications of owner-involvement in corporations providing the facilities with such services as food, laundry, and furniture.

"While Board of Social Welfare rules and statutes do not prevent these relationships, and the existence of such relationship is not in itself evidence of impropriety, they raise questions which require further study," the report added.

Accordingly, the report noted that Commissioner Stephen Berger has recommended to the Board of Social Welfare and to Governor Carey that the authority of Mr. Hynes be expanded to permit an independent investigation of the proprietary homes.

Mr. Hynes has already said he would welcome a chance to undertake such an investigation, but Bernard Shapiro, executive director of the board, has said he would prefer strengthening his own agency's monitoring capabilities.

The Board of Social Welfare has been pressing for some time for a law requiring uniform financial reporting and accounting of expenses from the proprietary homes. Such a bill has been introduced for the past two sessions of the Legislature. It passed the Senate last year but was blocked in the Assembly Committee on Governmental Operation. A spokesman for the Social Welfare Board said the bill would be reintroduced this year.

Today's report found that costs per-resident varied widely across the state, from a low of $1,541 to a high of $6,475 annually. A lack of additional information, the report said, made it impossible to tell whether an increase in the public subsidy level—something the operators are pressing for—would yield a corresponding increase in the level of care.

The Senate Subcommittee on Long-Term Care for the Aged has reported findings of growing abuses in the multimillion-dollar industry. It has accused many of the homes of "warehousing" elderly people, especially the mentally ill who have been discharged by state mental hospitals into substandard, profit-making but publicly subsidized boarding homes.

High Court Upholds Board On Shorter School Week

Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, March 25 — The state's highest court today unanimously upheld the right of the New York City Board of Education to shorten the school week by two 45-minute "preparation periods" as part of the settlement of a teachers' strike last September.

The settlement had been challenged by the New York City School Boards Association and 22 community school districts, which said that the Decentralization Law had been violated.

In affirming decisions in the State Supreme Court and the Appellate Division, both of which had dismissed the challenge, Chief Judge Charles D. Breitler of the Court of Appeals ruled that despite decentralization, it is the central Board of Education alone that has the power to set citywide policy.

The powers of a community school board are limited to matters relating to the community school district, Judge Breitler wrote.

The opinion described in considerable detail the special circumstances that led to the decision to shorten the school day twice a week.

That decision, Judge Breitler wrote, "was made in the context of the city's desperate financial crisis."

Judge Breitler continued: "Budget cuts imposed upon the board by the city had to be met by sharply curtailed expenditures. Whipsawed between the irresponsibly striking teachers and an intractable fiscal dilemma, the board made what it apparently believed was the best of the situation."

Judge Breitler noted that the shortened school day was designed to save between $25 million and $30 million, and observed: "While it is possible to question the educational wisdom of this solution, it is not for the courts to do so."

"The court," he said, "may not, under the guise of enforcing a vague educational public policy suggested to it, assume the exercise of educational policy vested by Constitution and statute in school administrative agencies."

Stein Calls for the Consolidation Of 200 Agencies to Save Money

By BARBARA CAMPBELL

Assemblyman Andrew J. Stein called yesterday for the consolidation of more than 200 public authorities and agencies in the state that he said made up a "multibillion-dollar hidden government."

Merging these agencies, which are virtually empires unto themselves, "could save $350 million a year," he said.

Mr. Stein, speaking on the site of the proposed Battery Park City Housing Development, owned by the Battery Park Authority, said the "state has slowly and almost without any public awareness built up a second government not responsible either to the Legislature or the Governor's direct control."

"This second government has been virtually untouched by budget cuts even though many of them contributed to the current fiscal plight of the state," said the Manhattan Democrat, who is seeking his party's nomination for United States Senator.

Mr. Stein released a report compiled by his staff that said "there is no effort made to supervise any of these authorities." Attempts by the state to cut back on expenditures, the report said, do not affect these "hidden" government authorities. Mr. Stein added that the authorities and agencies should be placed under the State Comptroller's office.

The report recommended that there be "immediate full audits" of the expenses of each authority or public agency, an immediate 25 percent reduction of all administration personnel and costs, an examination of all contracts, leases or fixed costs expenses and the initiation of plans for disbanding all public agencies and authorities over a four-year period.

The report added that the Legislature should pass laws to permit the disbanding and also come up with legislation to "permit the surplus funds in the agencies and authorities to be used by the state for benefit of its citizens."

Most witnesses suggested changes in the standard lease for New York City landlords, which would tenants' rights and make the language more understandable to the layman. The board plans to make recommendations to the Legislature within 60 days.

Held in Harboring of Fugitive

A New Jersey woman was charged with harboring one of the Bureau of Investigation's 10 most-wanted fugitives, Ethel White, 29 years old, of East Newark, arrested at her job in a Newark tavern and charged with harboring Anthony M. Juliano, arrested last Monday on charges stemming from a City Bank robbery, according to the F.B.I.

Artis Trial Date Set

A tentative trial date of June 7 was set for Rubin Carter and John Artis, whose convictions on a charge of murdering a police officer were overturned by the New Jersey Supreme Court. The trial in Paterson could be delayed until September if the Prosecutor or defense lawyers request more time for their cases.

-By Gain as Robbery Fails

A burst of at least 12 shots, three policemen alleged robbers fleeing from a Chemical Bank branch at 401 Flatbush Avenue near Grand Army Plaza in the Slope section of Brooklyn. Two bags containing money were dropped outside the bank, and passers-by picked up several hundred dollars while officers chased the robbers, identified as Larry Irving, 24 years old, of 55 Avenue, Brooklyn, and Albert Hicks, 22, of 1031 Avenue, Brooklyn. A total of $14,214 was recovered.

Y.M.C.A. Opening An Annex in House That Morgan Built

When J. Pierpont Morgan built a parish house for St. George's Church on Stuyvesant Square in 1888, the act was a personal gesture by the financier to the neighborhood in which he lived and to the memory of his father - in law, Charles Tracy, a church officer.

But times have changed, and this evening the house that Morgan built will be opened officially as a Y.M.C.A. annex.

The parent Episcopal church will retain title to the parish house, at 207 East 18th Street, as stipulated in Mr. Morgan's will. But the McBurney Y.M.C.A., on 23d Street west of Seventh Avenue, has taken over three floors of the building for an extension and has options to move into three more.

An independent nursery school will continue to occupy the ground floor of the seven-story building.

After spending about $10,000 to renovate portions of the building and bringing in a team of about 40 teachers, the Y.M.C.A. has emerged with a program in the spirit of "that Morgan would have wanted," according to Ravelle Brickman, a Y.M.C.A. director of special projects, but one that she admitted "might have startled him" with some of its services.

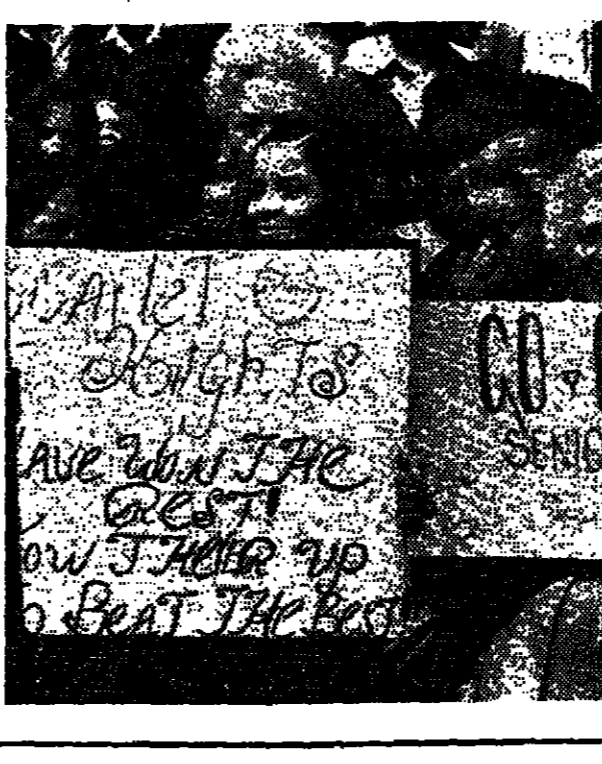

When the parish house opened in 1888, it was a place where the Girls' Friendly Society could hold activities and the Cadet Battalion could conduct drills, "bidding the neighborhood look for, strive for and believe in . . . a better day," as Morgan wrote in a letter about the parish house.

The new program will pursue those same goals, but through assertiveness, training, judo, karate and transactional analysis, as well as more classical programs in athletics, cooking and arts.

'Groupers' Plan for Sun and Sociability

And when the three saw "Snug Cozy," it was love at first sight. "It's so cute," said Miss Joseph, a 25-year-old secretary at a Manhattan advertising agency...

Well, rarely does one find perfection in a rented singles' summer house; roughing it is half the fun. And so the three young women decided to become "groupers" and take part shares in "Snug Cozy," which means that for $375 each they will be allowed to spend every other summer weekend there...

PARENTS/CHILDREN To Keep an Illness From Becoming a Weapon

By RICHARD FLASTE

Families know the problems—they're Carol Eagle, who heads the child health division at Montefiore Hospital, "arenas of conflict."

Adolescence, when family tensions can be at their highest anyway, is an especially difficult time for the diabetic, who wants to be like everybody else, wants to have that pizza and Coke with friends, and is increasingly angry at the frustrating incurability of this fetering disease.

On top of that, there is what Dr. Eagle refers to as the "romantic idea of death," which many teen-agers going through normal rebellion have. They think, she said, "about suicide and serious accidents and how sorry mother and father will be when they're gone."

Giving vent to those thoughts in even a temporary divergence from the diabetic's routine can result in illness and hospitalization within 24 hours.

Mrs. Knight said that one result of the group sessions was that youngsters in them appeared to require considerably fewer hospitalizations than other diabetic children at the hospital.

She gave examples of some of the difficulties that had to be overcome with children. One child, for instance, displaying her desire to keep her mother home from work, refused to take her insulin after her mother had left the house.

There was the teen-ager who would get into such violent arguments with her mother that the girl would go out and drink liquor, an activity sure to throw her system out of balance.

And there are innumerable children who find that diabetes, like other illnesses, is an excellent way to perpetuate a great deal of attention, and an excuse for not doing schoolwork. The fact is that the parents often do see their children as frail and incapable.

Edward Moran, who was at a recent group therapy session with his 3-year-old Mary, was trying hard not to overprotect her, but he was afraid that she might become easily infected if cut, and that seemed to make him tense.

"To tell you the truth," he explained, "I was listening to a hockey game and Bobby Clarke got cut and the announcer said Clarke was more susceptible to infections because he was diabetic."

"To tell you the truth," he explained, "I was listening to a hockey game and Bobby Clarke got cut and the announcer said Clarke was more susceptible to infections because he was diabetic."

One mother believed that her son's resistance to colds was diminished by diabetes and seemed to have a running battle with his school over his repeated absences.

In actuality, Dr. Finkelstein told the group, the children are not especially more susceptible to illness and infections. When the mother persisted in her belief about the child's colds, Dr. Finkelstein said Mrs. Knight went from parent to parent in the group asking if long colds seemed true of the other children, and almost every parent, as if voting, said no that didn't appear to be the case.

Another element that was discussed in the meeting was the continuing fear the parents have of their children dying in the night—not an unreasonable fear since that has been known to happen. But it is rare and Dr. Finkelstein said he was personally acquainted with no such cases in his 13 years of treating diabetics.

Nevertheless, it is difficult for Wilfred Ramirez, whose daughter, Anna, is 5, to control the fear. "Every morning I get up and go to her room and hear her breathing," he said, imitating the sound of labored breathing, "and it scares me."

The children, for their part, did not express that kind of fear talking more about symptoms, such as dizziness, that may or may not have been related to the diabetes. And one boy revealed that he'd been a bit careless in treating himself, a self-neglect that may have to be dealt with in future sessions.

In addition to seeing to it that distorted ideas about diabetes and inappropriate uses of its symptoms surface, the sessions point out troubles that require help beyond the monthly meetings.

Dr. Eagle said it was the time a youngster merely reported in a meeting that she was being "picked on" at home.

The whole family—five brothers and sisters—was brought in, and it turned out that not only was the girl angry at herself for being diabetic, but the others were angry at her for receiving special privileges.

As the family relationships were described and then modified through the therapy, the quarreling and scapegoating subsided.

This was the kind of situation in which, when it came to privileges, it was infinitely better not to be special.

Everyone's in the Kitchen With La Deva

By SHAWN G. KENNEDY

st glance "What's Cooking?" seems unishable from any other television cooking show. An aproned hostess, in one of those pristine kitchen sets that is supposed to be a home (but seems too tidy, too

La Deva Davis

So last spring, Miss Davis, a 31-year-old junior high school music teacher who was neither a professional cook nor a seasoned television performer, was offered the job. The producers had "discovered" Miss Davis, who sings professionally, two years before when she brought an Afro-American dance troupe to the station for a show.

"They called me at home about a year ago and said, 'La Deva, do you cook at all?'" Miss Davis recalled during an interview recently. "I told them that I was no Julia Child but that I knew my way around the burners."

although the show is being aired now, she is back in the classroom "with the kids, who I really enjoy."

There is no doubt, staff members insist, that Miss Davis's humorous approach was responsible for the show's success. But there was a no-nonsense side to it as well. A cadre of nutritionists, dietitians and staff members worked out the recipes, planned the menus, tested the dishes, computed the cost, calories and nutritive value of each recipe and then shopped for the groceries and set up the kitchen for each taping session with Miss Davis.

For All Tastes Though low cost was a factor—most dishes cost no more than $2.25 to prepare and a few could be made for 95 cents—Miss Davis's repertory included some things for all tastes. Among the dishes prepared during the series were some with a foreign flavor, like the chicken in almond sauce and the bouillabaisse and some "down home" dishes like cornmeal and bacon bake or bread pudding.

And then there were others that defied classification, such as the meatballs simmered in cranberry sauce and tomato soup.

The show's producer, Lynn Lonker, won't say, "What's Cooking?" is a hit, but the program is now seen in 95 viewing areas across the country (it is seen in the New York area on Channel 25 on Fridays at 7:30 P.M. and on Saturdays at 4:30 and on Channel 21 on Wednesdays at 7 P.M. and again on Mondays at 3:30.)

"What makes me feel good about the show is that people tell me that, even though the dishes are cheap, they still taste good," Miss Davis said. "That must be true because even though I'm not a cook I couldn't keep the crew and staffers away from the stuff I fixed. If went like crazy. Gone as soon as we finished the show; every time. Except the day I fixed my BLT."

State's and Banks' Lawyers Try to Work Out Solutions to Problems of 'Spring Borrowing'

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN Special to The New York Times ALBANY, March 23—Lawyers for the state and the major New York City banks are struggling to resolve a broad range of legal problems so they can produce a prospectus for the state's "spring borrowing" by this weekend, officials said today.

talks at the Capitol and in law offices in the city. "We've overcome our most absolute, serious substantive hurdles," said one banker in the negotiations. He and others said the ones remaining involved some of the following: Which state officials, including legislative leaders, should sign and certify the document as to its accuracy; how is the document to describe pending lawsuits challenging the state's emergency financial measures; what provisions can be made as to future measures that would have impact on the state's spending.

There were these other developments in the state's fiscal problems today: Albany County sold $70 million in bonds to a syndicate of banks for Empire State Plaza, known as the Albany Mall. The state was thus assured that it would receive the cash that it would need to carry out this year under the complicated arrangement in which the giant project is being built. Had the sale not taken place before next Wednesday, the last day of the fiscal year, the state's precariously balanced budget would have been thrown into a deficit. The bonds were sold at 3.9 percent.

The Governor's office and legislative leaders were reported to be without an agreement on budget bills that Governor Carey wants passed, again before Wednesday, including one bill to grant the budget division more flexibility in making spending cuts.

A major unresolved matter was said to be a request by the banks that Mr. Lefkowitz certify the accuracy of the prospectus. Mr. Lefkowitz was reported to have agreed to certify legal issues, but not substantive statements on state tax revenues and expenditures. The banks had also reportedly requested that the state indemnify them from any lawsuits growing out of possible inaccuracies in the prospectus. The state strongly resisted this, and one banking official said this evening that this request would not be a condition of the purchase of state notes.

one imposed on New York City notes last year. The letter also called for the leaders to say that they believed that the state's budget was in balance. Although an aide to one of the leaders said he found the letter "insulting," it was expected that some sort of agreement would be reached on it. Mr. Lefkowitz was also being asked to certify future liabilities that the state might incur from pending claims in court, and to give an opinion on the merits of other lawsuits challenging the validity of several aspects of the state's finances. Mr. Lefkowitz was reportedly resisting these requests, as well as another request to say whether he felt that the Internal Revenue Code permitted the state pension funds to buy state or state agencies' securities in large quantities.

Killer Who Claimed To Hang for Two (UPI)—Thomas Creese, 26, who was sentenced to die by hanging for his slaying of a woman, was sentenced to life in prison by a judge in Boise, Idaho, after a defense motion was granted. The sentence was announced by Judge Durtsche after a 10-day trial. Mr. Creese, 26, whose boasts of high intellect and military training were widely publicized, had pleaded guilty to the slaying of a woman, Mrs. Edna Arnold, 34, in 1967. In Idaho, where he was carried out by the last of the gallows was Raymond in 1957.

The April issue covers that.

How did the game's reigning queen quickly take off 15 pounds and keep them off? Chris Evert reveals the sensible rules that keep her—and can put you—in championship form.

The popular Instruction Portfolio this month uses sequence photos, large drawings and clear, explanatory text to show the average player how to prepare for stroking a powerful, natural overspin backhand.

How good is President Ford's game? Who gets to play—and who plays the best—on the White House's single court? A fascinating inside look at White House tennis today and in the past.

Giving readers the best of what they want and more of it has made Tennis the best-selling publication in the tennis field...and one of the fastest-growing in any field. In July, its rate base goes to 300,000, four times the circulation of just four years ago.

Look at what else the April issue offers readers to help them play better tennis and enjoy it more:

A Special Nutrition and Conditioning Section. Chris Evert's first-person story leads off a five-article feature designed to keep you physically fit for tennis. In it...

■ A leading nutritionist tells how to strengthen your game and lose weight through a new eating practice called "carbohydrate loading."

■ Two of the game's greatest teachers outline an on-court and off-court conditioning program to get you in shape for tennis in just two months.

■ Dr. Denton Cooley, famed heart specialist, explains his personal fitness program.

■ The founder of the Grand Masters tour advises older players on how to get ready for the new season.

More Helpful Instruction. Besides the Instruction Portfolio supervised by Tennis magazine's Instruction Advisory Board of Tony Trabert, Vic Seixas, Margaret Court, Ron Holmberg, Bill Price and George Lott, there are nine more instructional pages. Including an excerpt from an illuminating new book by Roy Emerson and Rod Laver.

Great Ideas for Your Next Business Meeting. You'll find them in a detailed guide to setting up a tennis program for a group gathering...accompanied by a directory of resorts offering both tennis and accommodations for large meetings.

Plus These Major Features. You'll discover why a prize-winning tennis writer claims women's pro tennis is a big disappointment

And What Do Advertisers Get?

A successful editorial mix that attracts a growing segment of all tennis players. Over a 12-issue period, Tennis reaches a remarkable 24 percent of the country's "heavy" players—those who play more than once a week outdoors in season.

than any other tennis publication. In fact, in the year's first four months, advertising pages are up 39 percent over last year.

A wide range of advertisers are using Tennis magazine to reach its active, affluent audience—an ideal market for resorts, travel, automobiles, apparel, toiletries, visual equipment and just about any product aimed at a young, upper-income households.

I.R.S. Says Corporations May Face Bribery Actions

Tax Inquiry Also Looms for Companies Involved in Political Payoffs... By MICHAEL C. JENSEN... Donald C. Alexander, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, said yesterday that legal action may "soon" be taken against one or more corporations that have made political payoffs or bribes.

Donald C. Alexander of Internal Revenue Service, during an interview here.

He also said the tax service expected to investigate more than 100 companies for evidence of improper tax returns following such payoffs. The I.R.S. had previously disclosed that it was investigating 35 such cases, but had not identified the companies involved. Mr. Alexander declined yesterday to specify which corporations might be subject to future legal action or even when the cases might be brought.

Tarnished Times for 'Gold Bugs'

By RICHARD FHALON

A note of asperity has begun to creep into the stock market commentary of the "gold bugs," those tough-minded, often conservative analysts who revere the precious metal as the last line of defense against "debauched" currencies and the ravages of inflation. The note of asperity is something new. For a long time, the gold bugs had everything coming their way. Through 1973 and 1974 gold stocks such as A.S.A. Ltd., a closed-end investment company heavy with South African mining issues, and Homestake, the United States' biggest producer, all but tore through the roof.

The stocks tripled in value during a period in which many other stocks sold off sharply along with the price of gold bullion, which stood as high as $195 an ounce in the London market. For the moment, at least, the party seems to be over. Bullion is trading at around $133 an ounce, not far from its two-year low of $128 an ounce, and gold stocks generally have had it.

Many gold issues, in fact, are down 40 percent or more from their highs. Investors who overstayed the market are apparently making their disenchantment known. "We have received several inquiries from clients and subscribers about our gold mining share policies," says the current issue of the Lowe Investment and Financial Letter. "We wish to make it clear that we at no time advocated that a person should invest any more than a portion of their portfolio in this area."

"We are showing losses on our long-term gold mining share recommended list," the letter continues, "but keep in mind that these shares are for the long term as investments." Nothing daunted, the letter goes on to insist that "gold markets and gold shares are at or close to their lows" and rates as a "hold" eight South African gold stocks on which "realized" losses already range from 2 1/2 to 25 1/2 points.

Other gold bugs—the current issue of the Indicator Digest, among them—are taking the same unyielding tack, despite the political and military pressures that are building in South Africa. Those pressures are among the reasons why South African golds have sold off so sharply—that and the prospect of heavy bullion sales in world markets by the International Monetary Fund, the United States, and the Soviet Union.

What the gold bugs are waiting for, of course, is a panic flight into the precious metal by investors who will some day realize that most of the world's currencies actually aren't worth the paper they're printed on. Thus, the gold bugs monitor the distress signals fluttering over the pound, the French franc and the lira and nurse a morbid hope in the future. The gold bugs' eyes gleam, too, at the "high yields" their brutally hammered stocks are producing now. Some South African stocks (Blyvooruitzicht, for one) yield as much as 16 percent and 13 percent (Buffelsfontein and Western Deep) is not unusual.

The yields, of course, are no better than the mines' ability to continue paying dividends. Some opportunistic analysts who got out of the game early are convinced that rising operating costs and the drop in gold prices will continue to eat away at the industry's profit margins. Lawrence H. Heim, for example, he publishes the Heim Investment Letter—has just put together a list of 10 South African mines whose announced dividends for this June is down an average of 45 percent from the first half of last year. Further dividend cuts, Mr. Heim maintains, will be fully reflected in even lower stock prices. "Are these share a good buy for dividend investors?" he asks. "The answer is obviously no, in my opinion."

Though happily out of precious metal, Mr. Heim is no more bullish on the present state of the stock market than any of the unreconstructed gold bugs he's had so much fun twitting of late. He's urging his clients to put their money into Treasury Bills.

'Pent-Up Demand' is Cited In a Survey of Consumers. ANN ARBOR, Mich., March 25 (UPI)—American consumers are filled with a "pent-up demand" and according to University of Michigan economists, are in the mood to spend. The latest survey of consumer attitudes by the university's survey research center shows that an upsurge in consumer spending is assured in the near future.

About Real Estate

On West Side, Amateur Brownstoners Still Flourish

By ALAN S. OSER

In the heart of brownstone country on the upper West Side of Manhattan, brownstone renewal has become fairly exclusively a professional's game, those close to the situation say.

The reasons are clear enough: the stock of buildings available for upgrading has dwindled considerably in the cross-streets of the 60's, 70's, 80's and 90's, and the prices of those that do become available are much higher than they were in the heyday of brownstoning five to 10 years ago.

But on the uptown fringes of the area, resident-renovators are still in action, picking up sometimes extraordinary in-town housing at prices middle-income people can afford.

The West Side encompasses perhaps 230,000 people in an area bounded roughly by Lincoln Center, Central Park West, 110th Street and the river. In 1970 the census study found 108,000 housing units in that area, of which 98,900 were renter-occupied. Within that diverse housing stock there are 2,500 brownstones, according to Austin K. Haldenstein, one of the more active brokers. Over the last 12 years, he says, 1,700 of them have been purchased by owner-users, and 400 of them by professional renovators. That leaves a stock of only 400 that have not changed hands.

The purchase and renovation of these buildings have represented a housing investment of $300 million, he estimated.

All this has been accompanied by the extensive public construction of middle-income and lower-income housing, especially in the urban renewal area in the 90's along Amsterdam and Columbus Avenues, and by the Lincoln Center activity and private high-rise development mainly below 72d Street.

For the brownstones, the combination of continuing demand and shrinking supply has pushed up prices markedly—which is not to say that in a period of tight mortgage money there is a vigorous sales market or vigorous renovation activity.

In the middle sixties it was possible to buy a brownstone in need of renovation for $20,000 to $40,000, said Mr. Haldenstein. After renovation expenses the total cost would be $60,000 to $80,000. Now, buildings requiring major alterations in so-called better locations may cost $100,000, so that a full renovation can cost $250,000.

Today's costs are generally too high for an owner-user, so for them the tendency has been to seek the lower-priced housing in the West 100's off Riverside Drive. There it is said to be possible still to buy a brownstone with $25,000 in cash.

The traditional concept in brownstone buying was that after buying and renovating the building and renting out the space he didn't require himself — perhaps three to eight apartments—the owner would live rent free. Now people should expect an out-of-pocket cost of 30 to 50 percent of what they would have paid in rent, not including tax deductions, said Mr. Haldenstein.

In the West 70's and 80's some brownstone renovation activity by professionals continues, especially on those few occasions when a vacant building can be delivered to a renovator. Not many professionals care to get involved in the expensive and difficult—and sometimes impossible—task of trying to "clear" a building of rental tenants.

"We would never buy a building and vacate it," said Alan Sackman, an active West Side renovator who keeps the buildings he upgrades and rents out apartments. "You can be stuck for three years and go broke."

Depending on the size of the building and its location, he said, brownstones delivered vacant are selling for $90,000 to $120,000. "Prices jump from block to block."

An inhibiting factor in renovation is the apparent war-ness of mortgage lenders. Banks are described as nervous about the state of the city or bearish about lending on five-story walk-ups or more attracted to the bond market.

The extension of the city's J-51 tax abatement program to include larger commercial properties may well stimulate conversions to housing on the West Side. The River-side Plaza Hotel on 73d Street between Broadway and West End Avenue is under contract to a renovator, and former nursing homes are also candidates.

Curiously, in the urban renewal area—from 87th to 97th Street and from Central Park West to Amsterdam Avenue—the brownstone revival spread more on the side streets than high-rise subsidized construction of the avenue.

For all the problems professionals are chosen by that critical factor: demand. It is evidenced in stream of new shops on the avenues, and estimated one percent of rate in housing.

"There's going to be hotel renovation," said Kissen, who is working a renovation of the Side Towers at 87th and 75th Street. "I need mortgages of $2 to $6 million."

"We need units," Haldenstein.

A Sweepstakes for Consumers

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY
Would large national advertisers who are spending millions upon millions of dollars in television be interested in a way of making sure that viewers are paying attention to their commercials? It could just be that Thomas F. Hill and Daniel Waddell, the dynamic entrepreneurial duo that created Shopper's Voice, altered their concept to do just that. Time will tell.

Louis T. Hagopian, left, chairman and chief executive at N.W. Ayer ABH International, and Neal W. O'Connor, the chairman of the executive committee.

Hagopian Named Chief at Ayer

Yesterday Louis T. Hagopian, nifty golf player, super story teller and pretty good advertising man, was elected chairman and the sixth chief executive in the 107-year history of N.W. Ayer ABH International. Formerly vice chairman and second in command, he replaces Neal W. O'Connor, who takes the title—new to the agency—of chairman of the executive committee. Both men are 50 years old. Robert P. Zabel, who is only 47, remains president.

Although the answers were of peripheral value, the real purpose of that method was to involve respondents in the ads. Research showed an average sales increase of 30 to 40 percent among those who received Shopper's Voice. The adaptation, which will also include questions only answerable by someone who has seen the commercials as well as a schedule of when the advertisers' spots will run, will be a 19-page, gatefold insert in the May 15 TV Guide, which has an average circulation of about 20 million.

The consumer inducement is a sweepstakes with $50,000 in prizes.

Seven products from four companies will be represented and according to Tom Hill the first four approached, all prominent Shopper's Voice users, want for the deal. They are Nestlé, S. C. Johnson, Allen Products and Drackett.

Because of the change of size and delivery system, Shopper's Voice has been able to lower the advertising cost per thousand about 60 percent to $8. Advertisers are paying $160,000 for the two-page spreads.

They are being billed separately for the promotion that will consist of ads in TV Guide running in the two issues prior to the insert and a free-standing insert next week in Supermarket News.

Shopper's Voice Inc., Mr. Hill said, has contracted to run a minimum of two such inserts a year in TV Guide but could go to four or five. The company meanwhile continues to produce Small Talk, a direct mail piece following the original concept, that has Toyota as its only sponsor, and is working on a similar piece tailored to the cosmetic industry.

"There's one theme to this company," said Tom Hill.

"and that's creating uniquely effective media alternatives." Boy, you can say that again.

Interpublic Creates Own Ad The Interpublic Group of Companies, which probably makes more ads than any organization in the world, has just gotten around to creating one for itself.

A long copy ad with the headline "The important business of advertising was never more important," it addresses itself primarily to the industry but does include information on Interpublic's own growth record and list its subsidiaries. It will run in The New York Times, The Wall Street Journal, Advertising Age and Pensions & Investments.

Spanish Tourist Unit to Dentu The Dentu Corporation of America, the United States subsidiary of Japan's largest agency, has been named to handle the account of the Spanish National Tourist Office in the United States and Canada. The account bills $1.5 million, according to Dentu, which will be assisted in servicing the business by Ad Marketing. The previous agency was Compton Advertising.

Ogilvy Adds Dorothy Sarnoff Ogilvy & Mather confirmed yesterday that it has acquired Dorothy Sarnoff Speech Dynamics, which will be a separate subsidiary operating under that name. The Sarnoff operation's main function is teaching businessmen the art of verbal communication, not unlike J.

Washington Is Scored On Rail Plan for City The New York State Secretary of Transportation, Raymond T. Schuler, charged yesterday that, because of "Federal ineptness and inaction," New York City was in danger of becoming the only major metropolis in the nation without competitive rail service.

Reflecting Tires Required Starting May 1, bicycles sold for use in New York State must have reflecting tires... "The two basic exceptions to these requirements are bicycles with tires fitting wheels 16 inches in diameter or smaller, and tubular (hand sewn) tires," he said.

First, the good news. Then more good news.

It's good news to us that NBC News coverage of the first three Presidential primaries was seen in more homes than the coverage of the other two networks.

And it's more good news that so many television columnists are writing that they, too, prefer NBC's report of the primaries.

On the average, NBC's coverage has been seen in 31 percent more homes than its nearest rival, and in 59 percent more than the third network's.

As for the reaction of the critics, here's a sample to date:

"... We preferred NBC's late-hour special... an easygoing approach... emphasized New Hampshire was the beginning, not the end."

Jay Sharbutt, Associated Press

"NBC's late-night coverage in Massachusetts was a model of how votes are counted, commented and analyzed."

Lee Winfrey, Phila. Inquirer

"I came to the conclusion that NBC did it all over CBS in primary coverage."

Jeff Simon, Buffalo Evening News

"The team of Chancellor and Brill with the help of other NBC Network correspondents, told me almost everything I actually wanted to know. They did a stupendous job, but I kept wondering how many viewers appreciated it."

William Hickey, Cleveland Plain Dealer

We thank Mr. Hickey (along with others). But we think he underestimated viewer appreciation.

Just look at those early returns.

Who should speak for American women?

American women.

Good Housekeeping is pleased to announce the beginning of a 10-year forum for the women of the United States, representing not just one group's point of view but a true cross-section of the women in this country.

It is beginning today. A decade of democratic discourse among women, called "Women in Passage," sponsored by Good Housekeeping. Even now, as you read this, at the St. Regis Hotel a congress of over 200 women leaders, representing organizations and institutions from all segments of American life, have gathered to begin the forum that for the next 10 years will voice their feelings about the major issues that affect their lives as women. Their today. And their tomorrows.

It seems appropriate that Good Housekeeping should be the one to bring together the first "majority" voice of women, so that we may both hear and help them be heard. These discussions are completely in the hands of the delegates themselves—and the steering committee of illustrious women above who have shaped and directed this first year's program.

Today and tomorrow, the communications begin under the theme, "Today's Progress for Tomorrow's Daughters," initial dialogue that will be shared with our readers in the months ahead as guideline and in these changing years.

But most important, starting today, for the first time you will hear from the major voice of the few. But the voice of the many. Listen.
